till his death. He died suddenly on his way home from Synod, of cholera, Oct. 5, 1832. Three of his sons are now actively engaged in the work of the ministry in the German Reformed Church. He preached only in the German language. A number of prominent German Reformed ministers received their theological training under him.

Decision, VALLEY OF (עֵמֶק הֶחָרוּץ, E'mek, he-Charuts', vale of the sentence; Sept. ἡ κοιλὰς τῆς δίκης, Vulg. Vallis concisionis), a name poetically given to the Valley of JEHOSHAPHAT (q. v.), as being the ideal scene of the signal inflictions by Jehovah upon Zion's enemies at their restoration (Joel iii, 14). In perversion of some such prediction, the Mohammedans still believe that the final judgment will take place on this spot, and have accordingly left a stone in the city wall overhanging the valley, projecting as a seat for their prophet in the capacity of judge.

Decius, C. MESSIUS QUINTUS TRAJANUS, a Roman emperor, was born at Bubalia, in Lower Pannonia, towards the close of the second century. Being sent in 249 by the emperor Philippus to restore to subordination the army of Mœsia, which was in a state of revolt, the troops proclaimed him emperor against his will, and forced him to march upon Italy. Philippus having been defeated and slain, Decius assumed the government of the empire in the end of the year A.D. 249, but his brief reign was one of restless warring with the Goths, fighting against whom he was killed near Abricium, in the close of the year 251. Decius was an emperor of more than ordinary ability, but his reign was stained by a bloody persecution of the Christians. In point of time this persecution ranks as the seventh, but in point of cruelty it was only equalled by that of Diocletian. See PERSECUTIONS. For about forty years prior to the accession of Decius the Christians had enjoyed peace, which only in some parts of the Roman empire was, for a short time, interrupted by a decree of the emperor Maximin. The effect of this peace upon the religious life of the Church was, in general, not favorable. Cyprian, Origen, and other ecclesiastical writers complain that worldliness, avarice, and other vices had become prevalent, and that marriages of Christians with pagans had become frequent. Soon after his accession to the throne (probably at the beginning of the year 250), Decius issued a severe decree against the Christians. The decree itself is lost, the Edictum Decii Augusti contra Christianos, which was published in 1664 at Toulouse by Bernard Medonius from Acts of the Martyrs, being spurious, as has been shown by Tillemont and Mosheim. The contents of the decree are, however, fully noticed by Gregory of Nyssa and other ancient writers. It ordered the civil magistrates to destroy Christianity by threatening Christians with the severest punishments, and by using against them tortures of every kind. It was sent to the governors of all the provinces, and most of them hastened to execute it. They promulgated the decree, and demanded that within a certain time every Christian should appear before the civil magistrate, and publicly declare his renunciation of the Christian faith; in the case of refusal, he was to suffer severe punishment, even death. Dionysius of Alexandria and Cyprian have given detailed descriptions of the persecution in the region of Carthage and Alexandria. Cyprian says that at the first news of the impending persecution a majority of the brethren hastened to renounce the faith, but his account is suspected of exaggeration. That the number of apostates was very large is also reported by Eusebius. Of those who remained faithful, most left the cities and sought refuge in solitude. Among this class were many of the most celebrated bishops, as Cyprian, Dionysius of Alexandria, and Gregory Thaumaturgus. This action was generally approved by the Church. The number of those, however, who neither fled nor apostatized was so great that, as soon as the time appointed for the execution of the decree arrived, the prisons were not sufficient to contain those who were arrested. Decius wished executions to be avoided, but every conceivable torture, if necessary, to be resorted to. Most of the civil magistrates vied with each other in inventing the most cruel tortures; only a few showed a spirit of sympathy and leniency. The number of those who succumbed to the torture (lapsi) was very large. Many procured false certificates that they had abjured the faith (libellatici). On the other hand, however, the number of those who died or were mutilated for the faith was considerable. In Rome, Antioch, and Jerusalem the several bishops were massacred; Origen, famous among the early fathers, was subjected to the most acute tortures. All the ancient martyrologies abound in names of those who are reported to have suffered martyrdom under Decius, and Tillemont spent much time and labor to sift the genuine reports from the spurious (Mémoires, iii, 133–189). Fortunately, the persecution of Decius did not last long. About Easter, 251, Cyprian could return from his concealment. The war which the emperor had to carry on against the Goths, his absence from Rome, the inroads of barbarians into the African provinces, and several insurrections, greatly moderated the persecution at the beginning of the year 251. When Decius, towards the close of the year, fell in a battle against the Goths, the Christians were set at liberty.—Herzog, Real-Encyklop. iii, 309; Wetzer und Welte, Kirchen.-Lex. iii, 59; Neander, Church History (Torrey's transl.), vol. ii.

Deck, i. e. BEDECK (properly עָדָה, adah', to adorn, Ezek. xvi, 11, 13; xxiii, 40; Job xl, 10; Jer. iv, 30; Hos. ii, 13). See ORNAMENT.

Declamation, a speech made in the tone and manner of an oration, uniting the expression of action to propriety of pronunciation, in order to give the sentiment its full impression on the mind. The word is used also in a disparaging sense, as when it is said such a speech was mere declamation, it implies that it was deficient in point of reasoning, or had more sound than sense.—Buck, Theol. Dictionary, s. v. See HOMILETICS.

Declaratio Thorunensis, a confession of faith of the Reformed churches in Poland, drawn up at Thorn in 1645, for the settlement of disputed questions (ad liquidationem controversiarum). It is given in Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum, p. 669 (Lips. 1840).

De Courcy, RICHARD, a divine of the Church of England, born in Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; became curate of Shanbury, Shropshire, in 1770; afterwards vicar of St. Alkmond in 1774, and died in 1803. In his sermons his language is dignified, and his reasoning perspicuous, embellished by apposite allusions, and ornamented by many of the graces of oratory. His principal works are, Sermons, to which is prefixed an essay on the nature, etc. of a pure and undefiled religion (Shrewsbury, 1805, 8vo); Christ heaven were covered" may be matched by another precisely similar, where it is said that God would put the fear and the dread of Israel upon every nation under heaven. It requires no effort to see that such language is framed with a kind of poetic breadth. The real difficulty lies in the connecting of this statement with the district in which Noah is supposed to have lived, and the assertion that the waters prevailed fifteen cubits upward. If the Ararat on which the ark rested be the present mountain of the same name, the highest peak of which is more than 17,000 feet above the sea, it would have been quite impossible for this to have been covered, the water reaching fifteen cubits, i. e. twenty-six feet above it, unless the whole earth were submerged. The author of the Genesis of the Earth, etc. has endeavored to escape this difficulty by shifting the scene of the catastrophe to the low country on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates (a miraculous overflow of these rivers being sufficient to account for the Deluge), and supposing that the "fifteen cubits upward" are to be reckoned, not from the top of the mountains, but from the surface of the plain. By "the high hills" he thinks may be meant only slight elevations, called "high" because they were the highest parts overflowed. But fifteen cubits is only a little more than twenty-six feet, and it seems absurd to suppose that such trifling elevations are described as "all the high hills under the whole heaven." At this rate the ark itself must have been twice the height of the highest mountain. The plain meaning of the narrative is that, far as the eye could sweep, not a solitary mountain reared its head above the waste of waters. On the other hand, there is no necessity for assuming that the ark stranded on the high peaks of the mountain now called Ararat, or even that that mountain was visible. A lower mountain range, such as the Zagros range for instance, may be intended. In the absence of all geographical certainty in the matter, it is better to adopt some such explanation of the difficulty. Indeed, it is out of the question to imagine that the ark rested on the top of a mountain which is covered for 4000 feet from the summit with perpetual snow, and the descent from which would have been a very serious matter both to men and other animals. The local tradition, according to which the fragments of the ark are still believed to remain on the summit, can weigh nothing when balanced against so extreme an improbability. Assuming, then, that the Ararat here mentioned is not the mountain of that name in Armenia, we may also assume the inundation to have been partial, and may suppose it to have extended over the whole valley of the Euphrates, and eastward as far as the range of mountains running down to the Persian Gulf, or further. As the inundation is said to have been caused by the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, as well as by the rain, some great and sudden subsidence of the land may have taken place, accompanied by an inrush of the waters of the Persian Gulf, similar to what occurred in the Runn of Cutch, on the eastern arm of the Indus, in 1819, when the sea flowed in, and in a few hours converted a tract of land 2000 square miles in area into an inland sea, or lagoon (see the account of this subsidence of the Delta of the Indus in Lyell's Principles of Geology, p. 460–63).—Kitto, s. v.; Smith, s. v. Noah. Compare FLOOD.

De'lus (or DELOS, Δῆλος, so called from having appeared, δῆλος, manifest, from the sea, at the command of Neptune), mentioned in 1 Macc. xv, 23, as one of the places addressed by Lucius in behalf of the Jews, is the smallest of the islands called Cyclades, in the Ægean Sea (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Geog. s. v.), being only about five miles in circumference (Pliny, ii, 89). It was situated between Myconus and Rhenæa. It was one of the chief seats of the worship of Apollo, and was celebrated as the birth-place of this god and of his sister Artemis, or Diana (Spanheim on Callimachus's Hymn to Del.). We learn from Josephus (Ant. xiv, 10, 8) that Jews resided in this island, which may be accounted for by the fact that, after the fall of Corinth (B.C. 146), it became the centre of an extensive commerce (Cicero, Manil. 18; Pliny, iv, 22; xvi, 89; Livy, xli, 25; xliv, 29; Strabo, xiv, p. 688; Pausanius, iii, 23). The sanctity of the spot (Grote, Greece, iii, 222) and its consequent security, its festival, which was a kind of fair, the excellence of its harbor, and its convenient situation on the highway from Italy and Greece to Asia, made it a favorite resort of merchants (Strabo, x, p. 486). So extensive was the commerce carried on in the island that 10,000 slaves are said to have changed hands there in one day (Strabo, xiv, p. 668). It was especially celebrated for its bronze (æs Deliacum, Pliny, xxxiv, 2, 4; Cicero, Rosc. 46; Verr. ii, 34). Delus is at present uninhabited except by a few shepherds, but contains extensive ruins (Tournefort, i, 349 sq.). It, together with an adjoining island, is now called Dhiles. See Leake, Northern Greece, iii, 95 sq.; Ross, Reisen auf. d. Griech Inseln, i, 30; ii, 167; Sallier, Hist. de l'Isle de Delos, in the Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscrip. iii, 376; Schwenk, Deliacorum, Part I (Francof. 1825); Schläger, De Rebus Deli (Mitav. 1840).

De'mas (Δημᾶς, probably a contraction from Δημήτριος, or perhaps from Δήμαρχος), a companion of the apostle Paul (called by him his fellow-laborer, συνεργός, in Philem. 24; see also Col. iv, 14) during his first imprisonment at Rome. B.C. 57. At a later period (2 Tim. iv, 10), we find him mentioned as having deserted the apostle through love of this present world, and gone to Thessalonica. B.C. 64. This departure has been magnified by tradition into an apostasy from Christianity (so Epiphanius, Hæres. li, 6), which is by no means implied in the passage (Buddei Eccl. Apost. p. 311 sq.).—Smith, s. v.

Deme'trius (Δημήτριος, probably from Δημήτηρ, the Greek name of the goddess Cybele), the name originally of several of Alexander's generals (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Biog. s. v.), and borne by several of the Macedonian and Syrian princes, two of whom are often referred to in the Apocrypha, and three in Josephus; also by two men mentioned in the New Test., and by several others in Josephus.

1. DEMETRIUS I, surnamed SOTER (Σωτήρ, "the Saviour," in recognition of his services to the Babylonians), king of Syria, was the son of Seleucus IV Philopator, and grandson of Antiochus the Great. While still a boy he was sent by his father as a hostage to Rome (B.C. 175) in exchange for his uncle, Antiochus Epiphanes (Appian, Syr. 45). From his position he was unable to offer any opposition to the usurpation of the Syrian throne by Antiochus IV; but on the death of that monarch (B.C. 164) he claimed his liberty, and the recognition of his claim by the Roman senate in preference to that of his cousin Antiochus V. His petition was refused from selfish policy (Polyb. xxxi, 12), and by the advice and assistance of Polybius, whose friendship he had gained at Rome (Polyb. xxxi, 19; Justin, xxxiv, 3), he left Italy secretly, and landed with a small force at Tripolis, in Phœnicia (2 Macc. xiv, 1; 1 Macc. vii, 1; Josephus, Ant. xii, 1). The Syrians soon declared in his favor (B.C. 162), and Antiochus and his protector Lysias were put to death (1 Macc. vii, 2, 3; 2 Macc. xiv, 2).

having thus gained possession of the kingdom, Demetrius succeeded in securing the favor of the Romans (Polyb. xxxii, 4), and he turned his attention to the internal organization of his dominions. The Græcizing party were still powerful at Jerusalem, and he supported them by arms. In the first campaign his general Bacchides established Alcimus in the high-priesthood (1 Macc. vii, 5–20); but the success was not permanent. Alcimus was forced to take refuge a second time at the court of Demetrius, and Nicanor, who was commissioned to restore him, was defeated in two successive engagements by Judas Maccabæus (1 Macc. vii, 31, 32, 43–45), and fell on the field (see Michaelis on 1 Macc. vii, 32, against Wernsdorf, De fide Maccab. p. 124 sq.; also Joseph. Ant. xii, 10, 2). Two other campaigns were undertaken against the Jews by Bacchides (B.C. 161–158); but in the mean time Judas had completed a treaty with the Romans shortly before his death (B.C. 161), who forbade Demetrius to oppress the Jews (1 Macc. viii, 31). Not long afterwards Demetrius further incurred the displeasure of the Romans by the expulsion of Ariarathes from Cappadocia (Polyb. xxxi, 20; Justin, xxxv, 1), and he alienated the affection of his own subjects by his private excesses (Justin, l. c.; comp. Polyb. xxxiii, 14). When his power was thus shaken (B.C. 152), Alexander Balas was brought forward, with the consent of the Roman senate, as a claimant to the throne, with the powerful support of Ptolemy Philometor, Attalus, and Ariarathes. Demetrius vainly endeavored to secure the services of Jonathan, who had succeeded his brother Judas as leader of the Jews, and now, from the recollection of his wrongs, warmly favored the cause of Alexander (1 Macc. x, 1–6). The rivals met in a decisive engagement (B.C. 150), and Demetrius, after displaying the greatest personal bravery, was defeated and slain (1 Macc. x, 48–50; Joseph. Ant. xiii, 2, 4; Polyb. iii, 5). In addition to the very interesting fragments of Polybius, the following references may be consulted: Justin, xxxiv, 3; xxxv, 1; Appian, Syr. 46, 47, 67; Livy, Epit. xlvii; Euseb. Ann. Chron. p. 165. He left two sons, Demetrius, surnamed Nicator, and Antiochus, called Sidetes, both of whom subsequently ascended the throne.—Smith, s. v. See ANTIOCHUS.

2. DEMETRIUS II, surnamed NICĀTOR (Νικάτωρ, "the Victor;" so on coins, Eckhel, iii, 229 sq.; elsewhere NICĀNOR), king of Syria, was the elder son of Demetrius Soter, preceding. He was sent by his father, together with his brother Antiochus, with a large treasure, to Cnidus (Justin, xxxv, 2), when Alexander Balas laid claim to the throne of Syria, and thus escaped falling into the hands of that usurper. When he was grown up, the weakness and vices of Alexander furnished him with an opportunity of recovering his father's dominions. Accompanied by a force of Cretan mercenaries (Justin, l. c.; comp. 1 Macc. x, 67), and aided by Ptolemy Philometor (1 Macc. xi, 19; Diod. Sic. Ecl. xxxii, 1), whose daughter Cleopatra was promised to him, he made a descent on Syria (B.C. 148 or 147), and was received with general favor (1 Macc. x, 67 sq.). Jonathan, however, still supported the cause of Alexander, and defeated Apollonius, whom Demetrius had appointed governor of Cœle-Syria (1 Macc. x, 74–82). In spite of these hostilities, Jonathan succeeded in gaining the favor of Demetrius when he was established in the kingdom (1 Macc. xi, 23–27), and obtained from him an advantageous commutation of the royal dues and other concessions (1 Macc. xi, 32–37). In return for these favors the Jews rendered important services to Demetrius when Tryphon first claimed the kingdom for Antiochus VI, the son of Alexander (1 Macc. xi, 42); but afterwards, being offended by his faithless ingratitude (1 Macc. xi, 53), they espoused the cause of the young pretender. In the campaign which followed, Jonathan defeated the forces of Demetrius (B.C. 144; 1 Macc. xii, 28); but the treachery to which Jonathan fell a victim (B.C. 143) again altered the policy of the Jews. Simon, the successor of Jonathan, obtained very favorable terms from Demetrius (B.C. 142); but shortly afterwards Demetrius was himself taken prisoner (B.C. 138) by Arsaces (q. v.) VI (Mithridates), king of Parthia, whose dominions he had invaded (1 Macc. xiv, 1–3; Justin, xxxvi; Joseph. Ant. xiii, 5; Livy, Epit. lii). Appian and Justin place this captivity of Demetrius before the revolt of Tryphon, but the order of the narrative in the book of Maccabees is most probable (notwithstanding Wernsdorf, De fide Maccab. p. 137 sq.). Mithridates treated his captive honorably, and gave him his daughter Rhodoguna in marriage (Appian, Syr. 67); and after his death, though Demetrius made several attempts to escape, he still received kind treatment from his successor, Phraates. When Antiochus Sidetes, who had gained possession of the Syrian throne, invaded Parthia, Phraates employed Demetrius to effect a diversion. In this Demetrius succeeded, and when Antiochus fell in battle he again took possession of the Syrian crown (B.C. 128). Not long afterwards a pretender, supported by Ptolemy Physcon, appeared in the field against him, and after suffering a defeat he was assassinated, according to some by his wife Cleopatra (Appian, Syr. 68), while attempting to escape by sea (Justin, xxxix, 1; Joseph. Ant. xiii, 9, 3).—Smith, s. v. 3. DEMETRIUS III, surnamed EUCÆRUS (Εὔκαιρος, i. e. "the Opportune);" on coins THEOS PHILOPATOR and SOTER (Eckhel, iii, 245, 246), king of Syria, was the fourth son of Antiochus Grypus, and grandson of Demetrius II. During the civil wars that followed the death of his father, he was set up as king of Damascus, or Cœle-Syria, by the aid of Ptolemy Lathyrus, king of Cyprus; and after the death of Antiochus Eusebes, he and his brother Philip for a time held the whole of Syria (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 13, 4). His assistance was invoked by the Jews against the tyranny of Alexander Jannæus (q. v.); but, though he defeated this prince in battle, he did not follow up the victory, but withdrew to Berœa. War immediately broke out between him and his brother Philip; and Strator, the governor of Berœa, who supported Philip, having obtained assistance from the Arabians and Parthians, blockaded Demetrius in his camp, until he was compelled by famine to surrender at discretion. He was sent as a prisoner to Mithridates (Arsaces IX), king of Parthia, who detained him in an honorable captivity till his death (Josephus, Ant. xiii, 14). His coins bear date from 218 to 224 Ær. Seleucid., i. e. B.C. 94–88. See SYRIA.

4. Surnamed PHALEREUS (ὁ Φαληρεύς, the Phalerian), the zealous keeper of the Alexandrian library under Ptolemy Philadelphus, who at his suggestion undertook the Septuagint (q. v.) version, and secured the benefit of the criticism of the resident Jews upon the translation (Josephus, Ant. xii, 2, 1, 4, 13). See Ostermann, De Dem. Phal. vita, rebus gestis et scriptorum reliquiis (pt. i, Hersfeld, 1847, 4to).

5. A freed-man of Pompey, who rebuilt, at his request, the city of Gadara, of which he was a native (Josephus, Ant. xiv, 4, 4).

6. An Alexandrian Jew and alabarch, who married Mariamne (formerly the wife of Archelaus), by whom she had a son Agrippinus (Josephus, Ant. xx, 7, 3).

7. A silversmith at Ephesus, who, being alarmed at the progress of the Gospel under the preaching of Paul, assembled his fellow-craftsmen, and excited a tumult by haranguing them on the danger that threatened the worship of the great goddess Diana, and consequently their own craft as silversmiths. A.D. 52. Their employment was to make "silver shrines for Diana" (Acts xix, 24); and it is now generally agreed that these "shrines" (ναοί) were silver models of the temple, or of its adytum or chapel, in which perhaps a little image of the goddess was placed. These, it seems, were purchased by foreigners, who either could not perform their devotions at the temple itself, or who, after having done so, carried them away as memorials, or for purposes of worship, or as charms. The continual resort of foreigners to Ephesus from all parts, on account of the singular veneration in which the image of the goddess was held, must have rendered this manufacture very profitable, and sufficiently explains the anxiety of Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen. See DIANA.

8. A Christian, mentioned with commendation in 3 John 12. A.D. cir. 90. From the connection of the apostle John with Ephesus at the time the epistle was written, some have supposed that this Demetrius is the same as the preceding, and that he had been converted to Christianity. But this is a mere conjecture, rendered the more uncertain by the commonness of the name.—Kitto, s. v.

Demetrius, bishop of Alexandria, is said to have succeeded Julian in that see A.D. 189 (Eusebius, H. E. v, 22). He was at first the friend of Origen, and committed the instructions in the school of Alexandria entirely to him (Eusebius vi, 3); but he afterwards, "overcome by human infirmity" (Euseb. vi, 8) seems to have become envious of Origen, and his enemy. When Origen (A.D. 228) was ordained presbyter at Cæsarea, Demetrius excluded him from the Church—an act which was not recognized by the churches generally. Demetrius died about 248.—Mosheim, Commentaries, cent. iii, § 30. See ORIGEN.

Demetrius, CYDONIUS, a theologian of the Greek Church, lived in the second half of the 14th century. He was born at Thessalonica or Byzantium, and probably received his surname from the circumstance that he lived at Cydone in Crete. The emperor John Cantacuzenus, who was greatly attached to him, raised him to the highest posts of honor in the state. When this prince thought of embracing monastic life, Demetrius determined to leave the world also, and both entered the same convent in 1355. Subsequently he went to Italy to study the theology of the Latin Church, and while there became a friend of Thomas Aquinas and other prominent Latin theologians. The year of his death is not known; the latest incident in his life is a letter addressed in 1384 to the emperor Manuel Palæologus, on the occasion of the latter ascending the throne. He is the author of a large number of works, and the translator of many Latin works into Greek. Most of his works have never been printed. His work, Περὶ τοῦ καταφρονεῖν τὸν θανάτον (de contemnenda morte, on contemning death), was published by R. Seiler (Basel, 1553), and by Kuinoel (Leipzic, 1786). A selection of his letters was published by Matthæi (Moscow 1776, and Dresden, 1789). For a list of his writings and their various editions, see Hoffmann, Bibliographisches Lexikon, i, 499; Fabricius, Bibliotheca Græca, i, 498; see also Hoefer, Biographie Générale, xiii, 553.

Demission, the name in Scotch Presbyterian churches for the act by which a minister resigns his charge. He can only resign it into the hands of the presbytery, as they ordained him. The court judges of the grounds of demission, and may refuse or comply. An old form in the Church of Scotland was as follows: "I, Mr. A. B., minister at C., for such causes, demit my ministry at the said parish of C., purely and simply into the hands of the presbytery of D., declaring that, for my part, the said parish shall be held vacant, and that it shall be free to the parish and presbytery, after due intimation hereof, by warrant of the presbytery, to call and plant another minister therein; and consent that this be recorded in the presbytery books, ad futuram rei memoriam. In witness whereof I have subscribed these presents at ——, etc." The demission being accepted, the church is declared vacant.—Eadie, Eccl. Dictionary, s. v.

Demiurge (Greek, δημιουργός, from δῆμος, people, and ἔργω, obs. I work; a worker for the people; hence, a workman, craftsman) was the name given by the Gnostics to the mysterious being by whom God is supposed to have created the universe. The Gnostics believed that the Supreme Being dwelt in a fulness (a pleroma) of inaccessible light; that he had created other beings, called æons, or emanations; that from these other æons were descended; and from these an inferior order of spirits were derived, among whom one called the Demiurge had created the world, and had rebelled against the Supreme Being. He makes out of matter the visible world, and rules over it. He was considered as the God of the Jews. "In the further development of the idea the Gnostic systems differ; the anti-Jewish Gnostics, Marcion and the Ophites, represent the Demiurge as an insolent being, resisting the purposes of God, while the Judaizing Gnostics, Basilides and Valentine, make him a restricted, unconscious instrument of God to prepare the way of redemption."—Schaff, Hist. of Christian Church, i, § 71; Mosheim, Commentaries (Murdock's translation, i, 45, 461; ii, 331). See GNOSTICISM.

Demme, CHARLES RUDOLPH, D.D., an eminent Lutheran divine, the son of Dr. Herman Demme, was born in Mühlhausen, Thuringia, April 10, 1795. He studied at the Gymnasium at Altenburg, and the universities of Göttingen and Halle. On the uprising of Germany to repel the invasion of Napoleon, he offered his services, and immediately repaired to the scene of conflict. His zeal led him into imminent danger; and at Waterloo he was carried, wounded and bleeding, from the field. He had been designed for the law. He came to this country in 1818, a young man of twenty-three, deeply imbued with the love of liberty, and an ardent admirer of American institutions. He entered the ministry in 1819, and accepted a call to Hummelstown, Pa. He removed to Philadelphia in 1822, and became associate pastor with Rev. Dr. Schæffer of St. Michael's and Zion's churches, where he continued to labor for thirty-seven years with great fidelity and success. Worn out by great labors, for several years before his death he was unable to perform any active duties in the ministry. He died Sept. 1, 1863. Dr. Demme was a man of enlarged culture, an accomplished scholar, and a prince among preachers. As a pulpit orator he was not surpassed by any of his contemporaries. Illustrating in his life the power and blessedness of the Gospel, he brought to the service piety and learning, and made the ministry of the Word the grand aim of his life, with which no other pursuit was allowed to interfere. In 1839 he was elected to the professorship of the Theological Seminary, Columbus, Ohio, and in 1849 was appointed professor in the seminary at Gettysburg, but both positions he felt it his duty to decline. He was a member of the American Philosophical Society, and was honored with the doctorate of divinity from the University of Pennsylvania. He edited in German the works of Josephus, carefully comparing the translation with the original, and adding a large number of notes.

Dempster, John, D.D., an eminent Methodist minister and promoter of theological learning in the Church, was born Jan. 2, 1794, in the town of Florida, N. Y. His father, the Rev. James Dempster, was a Scotchman, educated at the University of Edinburgh, and, though bred a Presbyterian, was received by Mr. Wesley as one of his colaborers, and sent by him as a missionary to America. He preached for a season in the city of New York, but for some reason became disconnected from Mr. Wesley's service, and was thereafter a pastor of a Presbyterian church in the town of Florida till his death in 1803. The son was too young to profit intellectually from his father's training, and grew up ignorant almost of books till his conversion at a Methodist camp-meeting in 1812, when he began a course of sedulous and systematic study, which he kept up during his whole life. In 1816 he entered the itinerant ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his successive appointments, as stated in the Minutes, were as follows: 1816, St. Lawrence, Lower Canada District; 1817, Paris, New York; 1818, Watertown; 1819, Scipio; 1820, superannuted; 1821-22, Watertown; 1823, Homer; 1824, Auburn; 1825-26, Rochester; 1827-28, Cazenovia; 1829-32, Cayuga District, Oneida Conference; 1833-35, Black River District; 1836-41, Missionary to Buenos Ayres; 1842, Vestry Street, New York; 1843-44, Mulberry Street; 1845-54, professor in Biblical Institute, Newbury, Vt., and Concord, N. H.; 1855-63, professor in Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill. "His fields of labor were extremely diverse, and yet he occupied every one of them with marked success. From the borders of Canada on the north, to St. Augustine, Fla., on the south, whither he went in 1835, primarily in search of health, and thence to Buenos Ayres, in South America; from New England on the east to Illinois on the west, his name has, during the last half century, been familiar to the good, and associated with active labors for the promotion of the cause of Christ." By incessant labor he made up largely the deficiencies in his early education, acquiring the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, and a fair amount of general culture. His mind, naturally metaphysical, turned especially to questions of philosophical theology, such as the divine nature and government, the will, etc. and on these topics he both spoke and wrote with great success. But the great work of his life was the organization of theological seminaries in the Methodist Episcopal Church. After eighteen years of labor, he saw two of these (Concord and Evanston) in full operation, largely as the fruit of his own industry, energy, and perseverance. He died Nov. 28, 1863, at Chicago. As a preacher he was at once simple, stirring, and profound. He seized with a master hand upon the great cardinal truths of revelation and providence, and wielded them with equal application to the judgment and the conscience. He left many MSS., especially a work on the will; but, thus far, all that has been published in permanent form is his Lectures and Addresses (Cincinnati, 1864, 12mo). See Appendix to his Lectures; Minutes of Conferences, 1864, p. 148; Methodist Quarterly Review, July, 1864; Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, vol. iii.

Dempster, Thomas, a Scotchman of much miscellaneous erudition, was born at Muiresk, Aberdeenshire, about the year 1579. He studied at Cambridge, went to Paris, and obtained a temporary professorship in the College of Beauvais, where he manifested a very quarrelsome temper. He was afterwards professor at Pisa and Bologna, near which city he died, Sept. 6, 1625. Among his writings is a Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Scotorum, "a work in which his desire to magnify the merits of his country often induced him to forge the names of persons and books that never existed, and to unscrupulously claim as Scotchmen writers whose birth-place was doubtful."—New Gen. Dictionary, iv, 359.

Den, the rendering in the Auth. Vers. of the following Heb. and Greek words: מְעָרָה, meärah' (Isa. xxxii, 14; Jer. vii, 11), a cave (as elsewhere rendered); מְאוּרָה, meürah', a hole (as of a venomous reptile, Isa. xi, 8); סֹךְ, sok, a booth or thicket ("pavilion," Psa. xxvii, 5; "tabernacle," Psa. lxxvi, 2), hence a "covert" (Jer. xxv, 38) or lair of a wild animal (Psa. x, 9); so מָעוֹן, maon' (Jer. ix, 11; x, 22), or מְעוֹנָה, meönah' (Job xxxviii, 40; Psa. civ, 22; Cant. iv, 8; Amos iii, 4; Nah. ii, 12), properly a dwelling-place or habitation (as elsewhere rendered); מְנָחָרָה, minharah', a fissure in the rocks, used for hiding (Judg. vi, 2); אֹרֶב, e'reb, an ambush ("lie in wait," Job xxxviii, 40), hence lair of a beast of prey (Job xxxvii, 8); σπήλαιον, a cave (as rendered John xi, 38), hence a recess for secrecy (Heb. xi, 38; Rev. vi, 15), or a resort of thieves (Matt. xxi, 13; Mark xi, 17; Luke xi, 38). See CAVE.

Antique Figure of a Man in a Den of Lions

In Dan. vi, the "den (Chald. גֻּב, gob, a pit; Sept. λάκκος; Vulg. lacus) of lions" is repeatedly named as a peculiar means of punishment for state offenders at Babylon. This usage, although not mentioned by any other ancient authority, has received remarkable confirmation (see "Truths of Revelation demonstrated by an Appeal to Monuments," etc., "by a Fellow of seven learned Societies," Lond. 1831) from certain remains discovered in that region by modern travellers (Kitto, Pict. Bible, note on Dan. vi, 16), especially one on a block of white marble found near the tomb of Daniel at Susa, and thus described by Sir R. K. Porter in his Travels in Persia (ii, 416): "It does not exceed ten inches in width and depth, measures twenty in length, and is hollow within, as if to receive some deposit. Three of its sides are cut in bas-relief, two of them with similar representations of a man apparently naked, except a sash round his waist and a sort of cap on his head. His hands are bound behind him. The corner of the stone forms the neck of the figure, so that its head forms one of its ends. Two lions in sitting posture appear on either side at the top, each having a paw on the head of the man." See LION.

Denarius (δηνάριον), the principal silver coin of the Romans, which took its name from having been originally equal to ten times the "as" (Pliny, xxxiii, 12), which was the unit. See FARTHING. It was in later times (after B.C. 217) current also among the Jews, and is the coin which is called "a PENNY" (q. v.) in the Auth. Vers. The denarii were first coined in B.C. 269, or four years after the first Punic War, and the more ancient specimens are much heavier than those of later date (Böckh, Metrol. Unters. p. 299, 469). Those coined in the early period of the commonwealth have the average weight of 60 grains, and those coined under the empire of 52.5 grains. With some allowance for alloy, the former would be worth 8.6245 pence, or 17 cents, and the latter 7.5 pence, or 15 cents. It has been supposed, however, that the reduction of weight did not take place till the time of Nero; and, in that case, the denarii mentioned in the Gospels must have been of the former weight and value, although the equivalent of the Greek δραχμή (Pliny, xxi, 109), or about 15 cents, is the usual computation (see Wurm, De ponder. mensura, p. 54). A denarius was the day-wages of a laborer in Palestine (Matt. xx, 2, 9, 13; Tobit v, 15); and the daily pay of a Roman soldier was less (Tacitus, Ann. i, 17). In the time of Christ the denarius bore the image of the emperor (Matt. xxii, 19; Mark xii, 16), but formerly it was impressed with the symbols of the republic. — Kitto, s. v.

The name of this coin occurs in the Talmud, in the form דִּינָר (see Lightfoot, at Matt. xx, 2). Pliny speaks of a golden denarius (Hist. Nat. xxxiii, 13; xxxiv, 17; xxxvii, 3; so also the Mishna, Kiddush. ii, 2, etc.), which was of the average weight of 120 grains, and was current for 25 of the silver coin. In later times a copper coin was called denarius. It has

Denderah (Gr. Tentyra; Coptic Tentore, probably from Tĕ-n-Athor, the abode of Athor), a ruined town of Upper Egypt, situated near the left bank of the Nile, in lat. 26° 13′ N., long. 32° 40′ E. It is celebrated on account of its temple, dating from the period of Cleopatra and the earlier Roman emperors, and one of the finest and best preserved structures of the kind in Egypt. The principal temple measures 220 feet in length by about 50 in breadth, and has a noble portico supported on 24 columns. The walls, columns, etc., are covered with figures and hieroglyphics. Prominent among the former is that of Athor or Aphrodite, to whom the temple was dedicated. On the ceiling of the portico are numerous mythological figures arranged in zodiacal fashion, which have been regarded as a representation of the zodiac; but certain peculiarities have led some recent archæological travellers to doubt whether the figures were intended to have any reference to astronomy. There are many other sacred buildings at Denderah, including a temple of Isis. The whole, with the exception of one propylon, are surrounded by a sun-dried brick-wall, 1000 feet long on one side, and in some parts 35 feet high.—Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.

Denis, the French name for Dionysius (q. v.).

Denis or Denys, ST., 1. the so-called apostle of France and first bishop of Paris, is said to have been sent from Rome about 250 A.D. to preach the Gospel to the Gauls. After delays from persecutions brought on him by his zeal at Arles and other places, he arrived in Paris, where he made many proselytes. Pescennius or Sicinnius Lescennius, who was then the Roman governor of this part of Gaul, ordered Denis to be brought before him, along with other two Christians, Rusticus, a priest, and Eleutherius, a deacon. Finding them firm in their faith in spite of torture, Pescennius caused them to be beheaded, A.D. 272, or, as others say, A.D. 290. Gregory of Tours, Fortunatus, and the Latin martyrologists state that the bodies of the three martyrs were thrown into the Seine, but were recovered by a pious woman, and buried near the place where they lost their lives. Their supposed relics, in silver caskets, were afterwards taken to the abbey of St. Denis (see below). The Acta of St. Denis, written about the end of the 7th or beginning of the 8th century, is founded upon popular traditions, and the best historians of France hold that nothing can be certainly known of either the time or the place of the martyrdom, or of the genuineness of the relics of St. Denis. St. Denis was for a long time confounded with Dionysius the Areopagite (q. v.). He is honored as a saint in the Roman Church on the 9th of October. His name was the war-cry of the French soldiers, who charged to the cry Montjoye St. Denis.—Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, xiii, 674. See DIONYSIUS THE AREOPAGITE.

2. The ABBEY OF ST. DENIS, near Paris, named from the tradition that Dionysius the Areopagite was buried there. The abbey was founded by Dagobert I, king of France, A.D. 613. The vaults of the church of St. Geneviève, connected with the abbey, contained (before the French Revolution) the bodies of 25 kings, 10 queens, 84 princes and princesses, and those of Bertrand du Guesclin and Turenne. In 1793 a mob, headed by the Jacobins, destroyed the abbey and carried the contents of the vaults to the nearest cemetery. The abbey was restored in 1806, and after the Restoration Louis XVIII caused such of the remains as could be found to be restored. There is still at the abbey of St. Denis a chapter of St. Dionysius Areopagita, composed of the grand almoner (primicier), 10 canons of the first class (archbishops and bishops aged over 60), and 24 canons of the second class.—Pierer, Universal-Lexikon, s. v.

Denis, MICHAEL, a German Jesuit, was born at Schärding, on the Inn, Sept. 27, 1729. He entered the order of the Jesuits in 1747, and was ordained priest in 1756. In 1759 he was appointed professor at the Collegium Theresianum at Vienna, and in 1773 librarian of the library of Garelli. After the suppression of the Collegium Theresianum in 1784, the emperor Joseph II appointed him second "custos" and aulic councillor. He died Sept. 29, 1800. Denis was in friendly relations with Klopstock and other prominent scholars of Protestant Germany, and was esteemed for his amiable character and for his efforts in behalf of German literature. He became especially known by his attempt to imitate the poetry of the ancient bards; but his poems were more admired for their noble sentiments than their poetical value. He also wrote several bibliographical works, and a Latin elegy on the downfall of his order (Fatum Jesuitarum). A posthumous autobiography of Denis was published, together with other posthumous writings, by Retzer (Literarischer Nachlass, Vienna, 1801–1802).—Allgem. Real-Encyklop. iv, 285.

Denk, JOHANN, an Anabaptist of the 16th century. Nothing is known of his early years. In 1521 he was in Basle, and in 1523 at Nürnberg, as rector of the school of St. Sebaldus. He rejected infant baptism, and promulgated anti-trinitarian ideas. He was brought before the council of Nürnberg, and, being unable to defend himself, was expelled from the city for life. We next find him in Augsburg in the year 1525, where he wrote and edited his book vom Gesetze Gottes. In 1526 he came to Strasburg, where he seems first to have become acquainted with Louis Hetzer (q. v.). Their connection resulted in the publication of an edition of the Old Testament prophets. It was published in 1527 at Worms, and Luther speaks favorably of the translation as such. Denk's theological errors soon became known, and he was cited to a public disputation by the clergy of Strasburg. Bucer was his principal opponent, and based his charge, that Denk's teaching made sin a mere empty sound, upon the book vom Gesetze Gottes. Denk was defeated and driven from the city. After a few months spent in travelling, during which he ventured to revisit Nürnberg, he went to Basle, where he died of the plague in November, 1527. In his doctrines he was Anabaptist and anti-trinitarian, and the following dogmas were peculiar to him. He taught an internal word which, as the power of the Highest, produces knowledge and love in man; that salvation is not connected with the Holy Scriptures; the law, under which he comprehends the entire Scriptures, is opposed to the spirit; the sacraments are of a subordinate and superfluous character to believers; the wicked are finally to be saved, etc. Ranke (Reformation, iii, 559, cited by Hardwick, Ch. Hist. ii, ch. v) gives the following statement of Denk's views: "The basis of his doctrine is, that God is love, which, he said, flesh and blood could never have understood had it not been embodied in certain human beings, who might be called divine men, or the children of God. But in one of them love was supremely exemplified—in Jesus of Nazareth. He had never stumbled in the path marked out by God; he had never lost his unity with God; he was a Saviour of his people, for he was the forerunner of all those who should be saved. This was the meaning of the words that all should be saved by Christ." His followers were called Dæmoniaci, because they named seven evil spirits to their candidates for baptism, which they were supposed to possess, and which must be given up, while seven good spirits were to be received in their stead.—Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, xix, 403; Trechsel, Protest. Antitrinitarier, i, 17 sq.; Theol. Stud. u. Kritiken, 1851, p. 121, 412.

Denmark, a kingdom in Europe, with an area of 14,553 square miles, and in 1860 (according to the census) 1,608,095 inhabitants in Denmark proper, and 124,020 in its dependencies.

I. Church History. — Willebrord is said to have been the first Christian missionary in Denmark (8th century), but he was not able to establish any permanent mission. Charlemagne extended the territory of Christianity to the frontier of Denmark, and his son, the emperor Louis, sent archbishop Eddo of Rheims as his ambassador to king Harold Klak, who had requested his aid. Eddo established a missionary school in Holstein. King Harold, who had been deprived of his throne, was baptized in 826, with his family and many of his countrymen, and soon after Ansgar (q. v.) was placed at the head of the Danish mission. Through his labors Christianity got a firm footing, but had still to struggle for about 150 years with paganism, until Canute the Great (1019–35), completed the Christianization of the entire country. The last stronghold of paganism, the island of Bornholm, was converted about 1060. The bishoprics which were established in Denmark were subordinate to the archbishop of Bremen until the 11th century, when a new archiepiscopal see was established for the north at Lund. The first bishops appointed in Denmark were Englishmen, and English influence prevailed until the 12th century, when Denmark allied herself more closely to France. In the following century French influence was supplanted by German. Convents were very numerous, but the enforcing of celibacy cost the pope more trouble in Denmark than in any other country. Until the 12th century the clergymen were generally married. In 1222 a papal legate came to Denmark to carry through the introduction of celibacy. Several hundred priests then appealed from the pope to a general council, but a national synod aided the legate in accomplishing his purpose. On the whole, Denmark was but little affected by the great ecclesiastical movements of the Middle Ages. The Inquisition remained almost unknown. Protestant ministers were called to Denmark as early as 1520, but the bishops, whom whose tenets and oaths are kept so secret that the uninitiated can only describe their outward appearance and the ceremonies which are practiced in public; and those recluses who, without belonging to any special sect, profess holiness and abstinence, and wander solitarily through the land. The word dervish is Persian, signifying poor, corresponding to the Arabic fakir, which gives name to the same order in Arabia and India. Oriental tradition traces the order of Hermits back to John the Baptist, and even to Seth. Two centuries before Mohammed, there existed in Arabia the Meschaiouns (Walkers) and the Ischrachiouns (Contemplatives). These, under the influence of Mohammedanism, merged into Mutekelim (metaphysicians) and Sufis, who were essentially pantheists. In the second century of the Hegira (729), sheik Olivan, a Sufi, established the first religious order in Islam. Dervishism doubtless took its proximate rise in Persian Sufism.

The Turkish dervishes claim caliph Ali, one of the immediate successors of Mohammed, as their founder. Ali himself founded no order; but some of his followers formed a society called Safashafei, men devoted to a monastic life. They soon fell into excesses, indulging in the use of drugs (chiefly hashish), intoxicating liquors, and, in fact, anything which would promote trances, ecstasies, and hallucinations, resulting in violent paroxysms and delirium. They formed the practice of cutting themselves, mutilating their limbs, standing for a long time in agonizing positions, and otherwise barbarously abusing their bodies. They, however, managed to reconcile with this external and public self-abuse an almost universal private sensuality. The members of this order were subsequently called dervishes, but at what time the word derrish was first used is not definitely known. There are in Turkey thirty-two orders of dervishes, having various names, and differing in their worship and practice. Outside of Turkey there are many more orders, called in the different countries by the local names Fakirs, Sufis, Santons, etc. The chiefs of the different orders are called sheiks, or pirs, who are privileged to nominate their successors. The dervishes mostly dwell in community, and have monasteries (tekiehs) in various places. Their rules are not very rigid. The declaration of Mohammed, "No monachism in Islam," had become a strong religious prejudice, and this prejudice they have never been able fully to overcome. Celibacy is not enjoined, though encouraged, and many of them are married. These, however, are not regular members of the monasteries, although they are required to pass the night there previous to any public exhibition. They may withdraw from the order at any time, and are often expelled for misdemeanors.

The mendicant dervishes are mostly foreigners, or those who have been expelled from the various orders, or impostors, who cheat and bewitch the people under the garb of dervishism. These travelling dervishes are mostly jugglers, and their skill in trickery is truly wonderful. They often become wealthy in the practice of their arts. Their power over the common people is very great, while the better-informed are beyond their reach.

The higher orders of dervishes have come to have an extensive influence not only with the masses, but with the government itself. This power was acquired (1) through the wealth which came into their possession. Large legacies were left to them for the benefit of the poor. These legacies were applied to building up dervishism. They soon learned also to impress the people with a strong belief in the efficacy of their prayers. These came to be purchased at high prices, and thus became a fruitful source of revenue. Their power was increased (2) by the popularity of the institution. In taking a stand against the dervishes, the government was virtually opposing a large majority of its own subjects. Sultan Mahmoud II attempted to break their power. On the 10th of July, 1826, he massacred the three chiefs of the Betacki dervishes in Stamboul, razed their tekiehs, and drove the most of them into exile. Ten years from this time they were as powerful as ever. The ulemas have always been their bitter enemies, and have affected to despise and ridicule them, but popular sympathy has been on their side.

In Turkey there are three principal orders, viz.:

I. The Mevlevy (Molowiyeh), or dancing dervishes, who claim as their founder Meolana-Jelaleddin-Hoomy-Muhammed, surnamed Sultan-ul-Ulema, or Sovereign of the Learned. Jelaleddin wrote a book called Mesnevy—a poetical composition—much of which has become proverbial in the East. The chiefs of this order exercise the prerogative of nominating the sheiks of the monasteries, and of girding each newly-made sultan with the sword of Osman. The dervishes of this order are humble in demeanor, and keep a fast during the month of Ramazan, in addition to the weekly fast on Thursday. Candidates desiring to be admitted to the order are placed on probation a thousand and one days, and required to perform the most menial services in the kitchens of the monasteries. The worship of this order consists in chanting the poems of their founder, reciting a prayer (fat-ha), and performing the dance, deor (circle). They have also an orchestra, who sing Persian odes, and play kettle-drums, tambourines, and fifes for the dancers. In these dances about a dozen engage at a time, and after a few minutes they are relieved by others, each set taking their turn three or four times during the service. The master of the dance (simazenbashy) watches them closely to keep them in their places. A traveller makes the following computation: "By looking at a stop-watch, I ascertained that on an average they turned sixty-four times in a minute. After spinning round for about five minutes, at a signal from the high-priest, both music and dancers suddenly stopped, but recommenced in a few seconds. The third time they kept it up for nine minutes and three quarters; my brain was swimming too, so much so that I could hardly count their evolutions. The fourth and last time they whirled for five minutes and three quarters, thus making in all 1504 turns in 23¼ minutes" (Auldjo, Journal of a Visit to Constantinople, Lond. 1835, p. 73).

II. The Bedevy (or Bodawy), or howling dervishes, as travellers call them, have a convent at St. Dimitry, near Constantinople. Their religious exercises consist of prayers (namoz), chants, and vociferations of the name of God, accompanied with a rocking motion of their bodies. This motion attempts to imitate the rolling of a ship on the water, and indicates their relation to God—Allah being the ocean and they the ships. They recite the attributes of God in a loud voice, putting a terrible emphasis on the word Allah as often as it occurs; and this they keep up with a kind of frenzy until voice and strength are gone, when many of them, covered with perspiration and foam, fall senseless to Deyling, SALOMON, a German theologian, was born Sept. 14, 1677, at Weida, in Voigtland. He struggled amid poverty to gain his elementary education, and completed his studies at the University of Wittenberg, where he became master in 1699. In 1703 he became adjunct in the faculty of philosophy, and in 1710 doctor in theology. In 1716 he was made general superintendent at Eisleben, in 1720 pastor in the Nicolaikirche at Leipsig, and during the rest of his life was professor of theology there. He died August 5, 1755. He wrote Dissert. de corrupto Ecclesiæ Romanæ statu ante Lutherum, etc. (Wittenberg, 1734, 4to); Observationes Sacræ (Leips. 1735–39, 3d edit. 5 vols. 4to), containing illustrations and critical remarks upon difficult parts of Scripture; also Observationes Miscellaneæ (Leips. 1736, 4to), on questions of exegesis and Church history; Observationum Sacrarum pars v (Leips. 1748, 4to). For a list of his writings (39 in number), see Doering, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 322.

Diabŏlus, the Lat. form of the Gr. διάβολος, Engl. "devil," i. e. properly an accuser, a calumniator. We rarely meet with this word in versions of the Old Testament. Sometimes it answers to the Hebrew Belial, sometimes to Satan. The Eblis of the Mohammedans is the same with our Lucifer; and the name is similar to that of Diabolus. The Mussulmans call him likewise Azazel, which is the Scripture name for the scape-goat, and is probably the Azazel of the Book of Enoch (q. v.). They maintain that Eblis was called by this name, signifying perdition, or refractory, which is nearly the meaning of Belial, because, having received orders to prostrate himself before Adam, he would not comply, under pretence that, being of the superior nature of fire, he ought not to bend the knee to Adam, who was formed only of earth. Diabolus sometimes signifies the devil, as Wisd. ii, 24; sometimes an accuser, an adversary who prosecutes before the judges, as Psa. cix, 6; Eccles. xxi, 27.—Calmet, s. v. See DEVIL.

Diaconate, the office or order of a deacon (q. v.).

Diaconicum (Gr. and Lat.). This word has different significations in ecclesiastical authors. Sometimes it is taken for that part of the ancient church in which the deacons used to sit during the performance of divine service, namely, at the rails of the altar; sometimes for a building adjoining to the church, in which the sacred vessels and habits were laid up; sometimes for that part of the public prayers which the deacons pronounced. Lastly, it denotes an ecclesiastical book, in which are contained all things relating to the duty and office of a deacon, according to the rites of the Greek Church.—Hook, Church Dictionary, s. v.

Diadem is the rendering of several Heb. words in the Auth. Vers. of the Bible: מִצְנֶפֶת (mitsne'pheth, something wrapped around the head), spoken of the tiara of a king ("diadem," Ezek. xxi, 31), elsewhere of the turban of the high-priest ("mitre"); צָנִיף (tsaniph', something wound about the head), spoken of the turban of men ("diadem," Job xxix, 14), of women ("hood," Isa. iii, 23), of the high-priest ("mitre," Zech. iii, 5), and the tiara of a king ("diadem," Isa. lxii, 3, where the text reads צָנוּף, tsanuph'), and צְפִירָה (tsephirah', a circlet), spoken of a royal tiara ("diadem," Isa. xxviii, 5). See HEAD-DRESS. All these terms occur in poetical passages, in which neither the Hebrew nor the English words appear to be used with any special force, except the first. See MITRE. But in Greek the distinction between διάδημα (only Rev. xii, 3; xiii, 1; xix, 12), or diadem, as the badge of royalty, and στέφανος, or crown, as a conventional mark of distinction in private life, is carefully observed (see Trench, Synonymes of the New Testament, p. 112 sq.). See TURBAN.

Tetradrachm of Tigranes, king of Syria, with the Oriental tiara instead of the simple diadem of the earlier kings or Seleucidæ.

What the "diadem" of the Jews was we know not. That of other nations of antiquity was a fillet of silk, two inches broad, bound round the head and tied behind, the invention of which is attributed to Liber (Plin. Hist. Nat. vii, 56, 57). Its color was generally white (Tacitus, Ann. vi, 37; Sil. Ital. xvi, 241); sometimes, however, it was of blue, like that of Darius, cærulea fascia albo distincta (Q. Curt. iii, 3; vi, 20; Xenoph. Cyr. viii, 3, 13), and it was sown with pearls or other gems (Zech. ix, 16; Gibbon, i, 392), and enriched with gold (Rev. ix, 7, where, however, the text has στέφανος). It was peculiarly the mark of Oriental sovereigns (1 Macc. xiii, 32, τὸ διάδημα τῆς Ἀσίας), and hence the deep offence caused by the attempt of Cæsar to substitute it for the laurel crown appropriated to Roman emperors (Cicero, Phil. ii, 34); when some one crowned his statue with a laurel-wreath (candida fascia præligatam), the tribunes instantly ordered the fillet or diadem to be removed and the man to be thrown into prison (Sueton. Cæs. 79). Caligula's wish to use it was considered an act of insanity (Sueton. Cal. 22). Heliogabalus only wore it in private. Antony assumed it in Egypt (Flor. iv, 11), but Diocletian (or, according to Aurel. Victor, Aurelian) first assumed it as a badge of the empire. Representations of it may be seen on the coins of any of the later emperors (Tillemont, Hist. Imp. iii, 531). A crown was used by the kings of Israel even in battle (2 Sam. i, 10; similarly it is represented on coins of Theodosius as encircling his helmet); but in all probability this was not the state crown (2 Sam. xii, 30), although used in the coronation of Joash (2 Kings xi, 12). Kitto supposes that the state crown may have been in the possession of Athaliah; but perhaps we ought not to lay any great stress on the word נֵזֶר in this place, especially as it is very likely that the state crown was kept in the Temple. In Esth. i, 11; ii, 17, we have כֶּתֶר (Sept. κίταρις, κίδαρις) for the turban (στολὴ βυσσίνη, vi, 8) worn by the Persian king, queen, or other eminent persons to whom it was conceded as a special favor (viii, 15, διάδημα βύσσινον πορφυροῦν). The diadem of the Persian king differed from that of others in having an erect triangular peak (κυρβασία, Aristoph. Av. 487; Suid.

s. v. τιάρα; and Hesych.). Possibly the צָנִיף of Dan. iii, 21 is a tiara (as in Sept., where, however, Drusius and others invert the words καὶ τιάραις καὶ περικνημῖσι), A. V. "hat." Some render it by tibiale or calceamentum. Schleusner suggests that κρώβυλος may be derived from it. The tiara generally had pendent flaps falling on the shoulders. (See Paschalius, de Corona, p. 573; Brissonius, de Regn. Pers. etc.; Layard, ii, 320; Scacchus, Myrothec. iii, 38; Fabricius, Bibl. Ant. xiv, 13). The words סְרִיחֵי טְבוּלִים, "exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads," in Ezek. xxiii, 15, mean long and flowing turbans of gorgeous colors (Sept. παραβαπτα, where a better reading is τιάραι βαπταί).—Smith, s. v. DIADEM. See NIMBUS.

Diadŏchus, MARCUS, a Greek theologian, who probably lived in the 4th century. Nothing is known of him except that he was the author of a small work against the Arians, entitled Τοῦ μακαρίου τοῦ Διαδόχου κατὰ Ἀρειανῶν λόγος (Beati Marci Diadochi Sermo contra Arianos), and published by J. K. Wetstein as an appendix to his edition of Origen's De Oratione (Basel, 1694, 4to; reprinted, with a new Latin translation, in the Bibliotheca Patrum of Galland, vol. v). Some writers suppose that Diadochus was one of two Egyptian bishops by the name of Mark who were banished by the Arians during the patriarchate of George of Cappadocia, restored during the reign of Julian, and mentioned in a letter of Athanasius to the Antiochians as being present at the synod held at Alexandria in 362. According to the conjecture of Galland, Mark Diadochus was one of two bishops named Mark who were ordained priests by Alexander, the predecessor of Athanasius, and exiled by the Arians; the one to the great oasis (Upper Egypt), the other to the oasis of Ammon. It may be that these two Marks were the same as the two preceding ones.—Hoefer, Biographie Générale, xiv, 21.

Dial (מַעֲלוֹת, maaloth'; the plur. of an ascent, as it is sometimes rendered; Sept. ἀναβαθμοί, Vulg. horologium), a method of measuring time employed by Ahaz (2 Kings xx, 11; Isa. xxxviii, 8). The word is the same as that rendered "steps" in Exod. xx, 26; 1 Kings x, 19, and "degrees" in 2 Kings xx, 9, 10, 11; Isa. xxxviii, 8, where, to give a consistent rendering, we should read with the margin the "degrees" rather than the "dial" of Ahaz. In the absence of any materials for determining the shape and structure of the solar instrument, which certainly appears intended, most interpreters follow the most strictly natural meaning of the words, and consider, with Cyril of Alexandria and Jerome (Comm. on Isa. xxxviii, 8), that the maaloth were really stairs, and that the shadow (perhaps of some column or obelisk on the top) fell on a greater or smaller number of them according as the sun was low or high. The terrace of a palace might easily be thus ornamented. Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Commentary on 2 Kings xx, 10, 11, however, gives some ingenious illustrations, accompanied by a diagram, and others may be seen in Calmet's Dictionary, s. v. See DEGREE.

The invention of the sun-dial belongs most probably to the Babylonians. Herodotus affirms that the Greeks derived from them the pole (πόλος, supposed to mean the dial-plate), the gnomon, and the division of day into twelve parts (ii, 109). Vitruvius also ascribes the most ancient form of the dial, called hemicycle, to Berosus the Chaldæan (ix, 9), though he probably means no more than that he introduced it into Greece. Certainly those Greeks to whom Vitruvius ascribes inventions or improvements in dialling can all be proved to have had communication, more or less remote, with the Chaldæans. The first mention in Scripture of the "hour" is made by Daniel, at Babylon (ch. iii, 6), although it is possible that Psa. cii, 11, and cix, 23, may contain allusion to the progress of a shadow as measuring diurnal time. The Greeks used the dial before the Romans; and with regard to the Egyptians, "there are no indications in the sculptures to prove the epoch when the dial was first known in Egypt" (Wilkinson, Anc. Egyptians, iii, 342). It has been suggested that the חַמָּנִים, "images," of Isa. xvii, 8; xxvii, 9; Ezek. vi, 4, 6, rendered in the margin "sun-images," were gnomons to measure time (Jahn, Archäol. I, i, 559), but there seems no adequate ground for this theory. On the mode of regulating time among the Greeks and Romans, see Smith's Dict. of Class. Ant. s. v. Horologium. See TIME.

The circumstances connected with the dial of Ahaz (2 Kings xx, 11; Isa. xxxviii, 8), which is perhaps the earliest of which we have any clear mention, entirely concur with the derivation of gnomonics from the Babylonians. Ahaz had formed an alliance with Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria (2 Kings xvi, 7, 9); he was a man of taste, and was ready to adopt foreign improvements, as appears from his admiration of the altar at Damascus, and his introduction of a copy of it into Jerusalem (2 Kings xvi, 10). "The princes of Babylon sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land" (2 Chron. xxxii, 31). Hence the dial also, which was called after his name, was probably an importation from Babylon. Different conjectures have been formed respecting the construction of this instrument. Grotius follows the Rabbins in describing it as "a concave hemisphere, with a globe in the midst, the shadow of which fell on the different lines engraven in the concavity of the hemisphere, these lines being twenty-eight in number." Mr. Taylor (in Calmet's Dict.) discovered some representations of ancient dials, one of which was found at Herculaneum, and was probably originally from Egypt, which he conceives to answer, in many respects, to the circumstances of the sacred narrative (see also Kitto, Pict. Bible, note on 2 Kings xx, 11). The subjoined figures seem to apply to the description of the dial of Berosus given by Vitruvius (ix, 9), "a half circle hollowed into the stone, and the stone cut down to an angle." This kind of sun-dial was portable, and did not require to be constructed on or for a particular spot, to which it was subsequently confined, and, therefore, one ready-made might easily be brought on a camel from Babylon to Ahaz. If the instrument used in this instance were brought from Babylon, we see the reason why the king of Babylon was so peculiarly interested in the event (2 Kings xx, 12). See AHAZ.

The chief difficulty in the case of the dial of Ahaz is to understand what is meant by the peculiar terms in which it is expressed, מַעֲלוֹת אָחָז, the degrees or steps of Ahaz. They may mean lines or figures on a dial-plate, or on a pavement, or the steps to the palace of Ahaz, or some steps or staircase he had erected elsewhere (see Carpzov, Apparat. Historic. Crit. Lips. 1748, p. 352, etc.). The Sept. in Isaiah reads ἀναβαθμοὺς τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ πατρός σου, "the steps or stairs of the house of thy father." Josephus also says "steps or degrees in his house" (Ant. x, 2, 1). The Chaldee renders the passage in Kings, אֶבֶן שַׁעֲתָא, "hour-stone," and gives the same meaning to "the stairs" (2 Kings ix, 13), and renders Isa. xxxviii, 8, by בְּצוּרַת אֶבֶן שַׁעֲתָא, "on the shadow of the stone of hours." Symmachus most certainly understood a sun-dial; στρέψω τὴν σκιὰν τῶν γραμμῶν ἡ κατέβη ἐν ὡρολογίῳ Ἄχαζ, "I will cause to return the shadow of the degrees which (shadow) is gone down on the dial of Ahaz:" and so Jerome renders it Horologium. M. von Gumpach's opinion (Zeitrechnung der Babylonier, Heidelb. 1852, p. 25) is that it was an accurate and scientific apparatus, indicating the half hours by the coincidence of the shadow of the upright pole or gnomon with the edge of the several "degrees" or steps, somewhat in the manner of the subjoined figure. Mr.

Supposed Form of the Dial of Ahaz.

Layard is favorable to the conjecture of Von Gumpach that it was a present to Ahaz from Tiglath-pileser; and he compares it with the presumed form of the tower of Belus, which may have been constructed in part for astronomical purposes (Nin. and Bab. p. 424 sq.). On the whole, however, the dial of Ahaz seems to have been a distinct contrivance rather than any part of a house. It would also seem probable, from the circumstances, that it was of such a size, and so placed, that Hezekiah, now convalescent (Isa. xxxviii, 21, 22), but not perfectly recovered, could witness the miracle from his chamber or pavilion. May it not have been situate "in the middle court" mentioned 2 Kings xx, 4? The cut given below presents a dial discovered in Hin-

dostan, near Delhi, the ancient capital of the Mogul empire, whose construction would well suit the circumstances recorded of the dial of Ahaz. It seems to have answered the double purpose of an observatory and a dial—a rectangled hexangle, whose hypothenuse is a staircase, apparently parallel to the axis of the earth, and bisects a zone or coping of a wall, which wall connects the two terminating towers right and left. The coping itself is of a circular form, and accurately graduated to mark, by the shadow of the gnomon above, the sun's progress before and after noon; for when the sun is in the zenith, he shines directly on the staircase, and the shadow falls beyond the coping. A flat surface on the top of the staircase, and a gnomon, fitted the building for the purpose of an observatory. According to the known laws of refraction, a cloud or body of air of different density from the common atmosphere, interposed between the gnomon and the coping of the dial-plate below, would, if the cloud were denser than the atmosphere, cause the shadow to recede from the perpendicular height of the staircase, and, of course, to reascend the steps on the coping, by which it had before noon gone down; and if the cloud were rarer, a contrary effect would take place (see bishop Stock's Transl. of Isaiah, Bath, 1803, p. 109). Such a building might also be called "a house." It agrees also with Adam Clarke's supposition that "the stairs" were really "a dial," and probably this very dial on which, as being in the most public place, or rather on the platform on the top of which they set Jehu, while they proclaimed him king by sound of trumpet" (Commentary at 2 Kings ix, 13). Bishop Stock's speculation that the retrogression of the shadow might be effected by refraction is supported by a natural phenomenon of the kind on record. On the 27th of March, 1703, P. Romauld, prior of the cloister of Metz, made the observation that, owing to such a refraction of the solar rays in the higher regions of the atmosphere, in connection with the appearance of a cloud, the shadow on his dial deviated an hour and a half (Rosenmüller). The phenomenon on the dial of Ahaz, however, was doubtless of a miraculous nature, even should such a medium of the miracle be admitted: nothing less than a divine communication could have enabled Isaiah to predict its occurrence at that time and place; besides, he gave the king his own choice whether the shadow should advance or retire ten degrees. There seems, however, to be no necessity for seeking any medium for this miracle, and certainly no necessity for supposing any actual interference with the revolution of the earth, or the position of the sun. In the more distinct and ample account of it in 2 Kings, it is simply said that the Lord, at the prayer of Isaiah, brought the shadow ten degrees backward. Adopting the present state of the text in the parallel passage, Isa. xxxviii, 8, it is observable that what is called the sun in one part of the verse is called the shadow in the other. It is certainly as philosophical to speak of the sun returning, as it is of his setting and rising. Thus the miracle, from all the accounts of it, might consist only of the retrogression of the shadow ten degrees, by a simple act of Almighty power, without any medium, or, at most, by that of refracting those rays only which fell upon the dial. It is not said that any time was lost to the inhabitants of the world at large; it was not even observed by the astronomers of Babylon, for the deputation came to inquire concerning the wonder that was done in the land. It was temporary, local, and confined to the observation of Hezekiah and his court, being designed chiefly for the satisfaction of that monarch. It is remarkable that no instrument for keeping time is mentioned in the Scripture before the dial of Ahaz (about B.C. 700); nor does it appear that the Jews generally, even after this period, divided their day into hours. The dial of Ahaz was probably an object only of curious recreation, or served at most to regulate the occupations of the palace. Mr. Bosanquet, in a curious paper read before the Asiatic Society, endeavors to make out a synchronism between the reigns of Hezekiah and the Assyrian kings by means of the astronomical event in question. He shows that upon such steps as appear to have been used for exhibiting the sun's meridional altitude, any very large partial eclipse on the northern limb of the sun, occurring about ten days from the winter solstice, near the hour of noon, would produce the effect described in the instance under consideration; and he calculates that such an eclipse actually took place Jan. 11, B.C. 689, which he accordingly fixes upon as the date of the Scriptural incident (Jour. Sac. Lit. Oct. 1854, p. 217, 218). This, however, does not tally with the Hebrew chronology, nor is it sufficiently confirmed by other savans to be entitled to reception. See CHRONOLOGY.

Diamond occurs in the Auth. Vers. as the translation of two Heb. words. See GEM.

1. יַהֲלֹם (yahalom', so called from beating, with allusion to its hardness), a precious gem, placed sixth in the breastplate of the high-priest, with the name of Naphtali carved on it (Exod. xxviii, 18; xxxix, 11), and mentioned by Ezekiel (xxviii, 13) among the precious stones of the king of Tyre. The Sept. and Vulg. understand by it the jasper; several of the ancient versions render it by onyx, which is not improbable; still others by adamant, which is less likely. There is much reason to doubt whether the diamond was known in the time of Moses (see below). Our translation "diamond" is derived from Aben Ezra, and is defended by Braun (Vest. Sacerd. ii, 13). Kalisch (on Exod. p. 536) says "perhaps emerald." See ONYX.

2. שָׁמִיר (shamir', a sharp point; hence often a brier), a precious stone, named in Jer. xvii, 1; Ezek. iii, 9; Zech. vii, 12. The Sept. in Jeremiah, and the Vulg. in all the passages, take it for the diamond. The signification of the word (from שָׁמַר, to pierce) countenances this interpretation, the diamond being, for its hardness, used in perforating and cutting other minerals. Indeed, this use of the shamir is distinctly alluded to in the passage in Jeremiah, where the stylus pointed with it is distinguished from one of iron (comp. Pliny, Hist. Nat. xxxvii, 15). The two other passages also favor this view by using it figuratively to express the hardness and obduracy of the Israelites. Our version has "diamond" in Jer. xvii, 1, and "adamant" in the other texts. Bochart, however (Hieroz. iii, 843 sq.), rejects the usual explanation, and, comparing the word shamir with the Greek σμῆρις or σμύρις, conceives it to mean "emery." This is a calcined iron mixed with siliceous earth, occurring in livid scales of such hardness that in ancient times, as at present, it was used for polishing and engraving precious stones, diamonds excepted (Hoffmann, Mineral. i, 561 sq.). Bohlen suggests an Indian origin of the word, and compares asmira, stone which eats, spoken of gems, iron, etc. from their hardness. Rosenmüller is in favor of the diamond in his Scholia, but in his Alterthumskunde he takes up Bochart's notion, and urges that if the Hebrews had been acquainted with the diamond, and the manner of working it, we should doubtless have found it among the stones of the high-priest's breastplate; and that, as the shamir was not one of the stones thus employed, therefore it was not the diamond. But to this it may be replied that it was perhaps not used because it could not be engraved on, or was possibly not introduced until a later period. The argument drawn from the rarity of the word in the Old Testament is of little weight, and there is no necessity for seeking an Oriental origin of the word σμῆρις, or ground for considering it identical with shamir, as it may easily be traced from the Greek itself (see Passow, s. v.; Eichhorn, De Gemmis Sculpt. Hebr.). For an account of the diamond of the ancients, see Moore's Ancient Mineralogy, p. 143–145. See ADAMANT.

The diamond is the hardest and most valuable of the precious stones, and for many ages was considered indestructible by fire or any other means; modern chemistry, however, has proved that at a heat rather below that required to melt silver it is gradually dissipated or burned. It is, in fact, nothing but pure carbon, but in a more highly crystallized state than coal. In former times, all the diamonds that were known were brought from different parts of India, particularly from the famous mine of Golconda, near Hyderabad, the present capital of the Deccan, in Hindostan; the islands of Molucca and Borneo have also produced many valuable stones. The diamond mines of Golconda are now so far exhausted as to be considered not worth the expense of working, and the diamonds which are brought to Europe come chiefly from Brazil. They are always found in an alluvial soil, generally gravel, resting on granite, and not imbedded in any other substance, but appear like small pebbles, with the surface flattened in many parts. See Penny Cyclopædia, s. v.

Dian'a. The Artemis of the Greeks (Ἄρτεμις, Acts xix, 24), and Diana of the Romans, is a goddess known under various modifications and with almost incompatible attributes. According to the Homeric accounts and Hesiod, she was the daughter of Jupiter and Latona, born at the same time with Apollo at Delos. As the tutelary divinity of Ephesus, in which character alone she concerns us here, she was undoubtedly a representative of the same power presiding over conception and birth which was adored in Palestine under the name of ASHTORETH. She is therefore related to all the cognate deities of that Asiatic Juno-Venus, and partakes, at least, of their connection with the moon. Creuzer has combined a number of testimonies in order to show how her worship was introduced into Ephesus from the coasts of the Black Sea, and endeavors to point out the several Medo-Persian, Egyptian, Libyan, Scythian, and Cretan elements of which she is compounded (Symbolik, ii, 115 sq.). The Arabic version of the Acts renders Artemis, in the chapter cited, by Az-Zuharat, which is the Arabic name for the planet Venus. From certain Ephesian coins which represent her seated upon her favorite deer, and in other rustic positions, it appears that she was identical with the virgin huntress of the earlier mythology, the grosser feature of her worship being apparently borrowed from association with the voluptuous religions of the East. Guhl, indeed (Ephesiaca, p. 78–86), endeavors in almost all points to identify her with the true Greek goddess. In some respects there was doubtless a fusion of the two. Diana was the goddess of rivers, of pools, and of harbors, and these conditions are satisfied by the situation of the sanctuary at Ephesus. Coressus, one of the hills on which the city stood, is connected by Stephanus Byzantius with κόρη, "maid." We may also refer to the popular notion that, when the temple was burnt on the night of Alexander's birth, the calamity occurred because the goddess was absent in the character of Lucina. But the true Ephesian Diana is represented in a form entirely alien from Greek art (see Jerome, Præfat. ad Ephes. p. 539, ed. Ver.). Guhl indeed supposes this mode of representation to have reference simply to the fountains over which the goddess presided, conceiving the multiplication of breasts to be similar to the multiplication of eyes in Argus or of heads in Typhœus. But the correct view is undoubtedly that which treats this peculiar form as a symbol of the productive and nutritive powers of nature. This is the form under which the Ephesian Diana, so called for distinction, was always represented, wherever worshipped; and the worship extended to many places, such as Samos, Mitylene, Perga, Hierapolis, and Gortyna, to mention those only which occur in the N. T. or the Apocrypha. Josephus mentions a very rich fane of hers at Elymais in Persia (Ant. xii, 9, 1). Her most noted temple was at Ephesus. Here also, as in the temple of Apollo at Daphne, were the privileges of asylum. This is indicated on some of the coins of Ephesus (Akerman, in Trans. of the Numismatic Soc. 1841); and we find an interesting proof of the continuance of these privileges in imperial times in Tacit. Ann. iii, 61 (Strabo, xiv, 641; Pausan. vii, 2; Cicero, Verr. ii, 33). The temple had a large revenue from endowments of various kinds. It was also the public treasury of the city, and was regarded as the safest bank for private individuals. See EPHESUS.

Her temple at Ephesus was one of the wonders of the world, but its great glory was the διοπετὲς ἄγαλμα, "the image which fell down from Jupiter" (Acts xix, 35). Images claiming so lofty an origin were to be found in other cities besides Ephesus. There was a similar one at the temple of the Tauric Diana, and another of Minerva, called the Palladium, at Troy. At Rome, too, was the sacred ancile or shield of Mars, which Numa pretended had fallen from heaven, and it was jealously guarded in consequence. The early images of Diana are supposed to have been simply black conical stones, and afford another reason for the semi-conical figure of the Ephesian Diana. They may have been aerolites, similar to the one which existed in the temple of the Sun at Baalbec, or the famous black stone in the Kaaba at Mecca. Her original Ephesian image, said to have fallen from heaven, was probably very rude, and, to judge from its representation on ancient coins, little more than a head with a shapeless trunk, supported by a staff on each side. There is some dispute as to the material of which her image was made. Most authorities say it was of ebony, the black color being, as Creuzer thinks, symbolical. Pliny relates that Mucianus, who had seen it, affirms that it was of the wood of the vine, and that it was so old that it had survived seven restorations of the temple (Hist. Nat. xvi, 79). According to Xenophon, it was of gold (Anab. v, 3). The later image with the full development of attributes, of which we give a representation below, is, as Creuzer says, a Pantheon of Asiatic and Egyptian deities. Even in it, however, we see how little influence Greek art had in modifying its antique rudeness. It still is more like a mummy than a Greek statue. Some of the most significant attributes in this figure are—the turreted head, like that of Cybele; the nimbus behind it representing the moon; the zodiacal signs of the bull, the twins, and the crab on her bosom; below them two garlands, one of flowers and the other of acorns; the numerous breasts; the lions, stags, and cows in various parts; the bees and flowers on the sides; and others described in Millin's Galerie Mythol. i, 26. See SHRINE.

Ephesian Coin with Diana's Temple.

Of this heaven-descended image the great city Ephesus was a "worshipper," νεωκόρος, literally a "temple-sweeper," a title which was assumed by many cities as a mark of high distinction. There were, however, a class of men particularly called νεωκόροι (Xenoph. Anab. v, 3, 6), who were persons of rank and consideration, and to whom was assigned the duty of offering sacrifices on behalf of the emperor. Her priests were called Megabyzi, and were eunuchs (Strabo, xiv, 641). They were restricted to a severe diet, and prohibited from entering any private house; they must have been a wealthy body, for they sent a statue of gold to Artemidorus, who pleaded their cause at Rome, and rescued their property out of the hands of the farmers of the public revenues, who had seized upon them. Once in the year was there a public festival held in honor of the goddess in the city of Ephesus, and to this festival all the Ionians who could do so made a point of repairing with their wives and children, bringing with them not only costly offerings to Diana, but also rich presents for the priests. No arms were allowed to be worn in the precincts of her temple. No bloody sacrifices were offered. The symbol of this divinity was a bee (Aristoph. Ran. 1273), and her high-priest bore the name of king (ἐσσήν). Her worship was said to have been established at Ephesus by the Amazons (Pausan. ii, 7, 4; viii, 12, 1). See ings. Soul was absorbed in body; the inner world in the outer—a tendency fostered by physics. It was the view of things taken by the scientific mind, and lacks the poetical and feeling elements of nature—a true type of the cold and mechanical age which produced it. Diderot's atheism is a still further development of his unbelief. It is expressed in few of his writings, and presents no subject of interest to us, save that it seeks to invalidate the arguments for the being of a God, drawn from final causes. It has been well observed that the lesson to be derived from him is that the mechanical view of the world is essentially atheistic; that whosoever will admit no means of discovering God but common logic, cannot find him. Diderot's unbelief may be considered to embody that which resulted from the abuse at once of erudition, physical science, and the sensational theory in metaphysics" (Farrar, Critical History of Free Thought, lect. v). A collection of his principal works was published by his disciple Naigeon, in 15 vols. 8vo, 1798, and reprinted since in 22 vols. 8vo, Paris, 1821, with a life of the author by Naigeon himself, which, however, is rather a dissertation on Diderot's writings and opinions than a real biography. Supplementary to the above edition of Diderot's works are Correspondance philos. et critique de Grimm et Diderot (Paris, 1829, in 15 vols.), and the Mémoires, Correspondance, et Ouvrages inédits de Diderot (Paris, 1830, 4 vols). See also Rosenkranz, Diderot's Leben und Werke (1866, 2 vols.); Carlyle, Miscel. Works, vol. iv; Rich, Dictionary of Biography; Engl. Cyclopædia; Vinet, French Literature; Hoefer, *Nouv. Didier, or Géry (in Latin DESIDERIUS), bishop of Cahors, was born at Albi in 595. He was of a noble family in Aquitania, and was educated at the court of king Clotaire II, who appointed him treasurer of the crown. Dagobert, the son and successor of Clotaire, gave to Didier, in addition to his office of treasurer, that of governor of Marseilles. In 629, when his brother Rusticus, bishop of Cahors, was assassinated, Didier was chosen his successor. As bishop he became very rich, and made himself popular by a judicious use of his wealth. Didier is a popular saint in Southern France under the name of Géry. His works have been lost; only sixteen epistles, addressed to prominent persons of his time, as the kings Dagobert and Sigebert III, are still extant. These epistles have been published by Canisius (Antiquæ Lectiones, tom. v), in Migne, Patrologia Lat. vol. lxxxvii, and by Bouquet, Collection des Historiens de France, tom. iv.—Hoefer, Biog. Générale, xiv, 102.

Didier, ST., archbishop of Vienne, was born at Autun, and became bishop of Vienne in 596. As he gave instruction in belles-lettres and ancient literature, he was denounced to Gregory the Great as teaching his pupils pagan literature. Didier found it easy to justify himself; but, having reproved queen Brunehild for her conduct, this princess convoked a synod at Chalons sur Saone and in 603 Didier was deposed and exiled to an island in the river Rhone. Four years after he was restored to his see, but as he did not cease to censure the queen, and as he endeavored to withdraw the young king Thierry from the influence of his grandmother, Brunehild had him waylaid and assassinated in a village called Prisciniacum, on the bank of the Chalarone (subsequently called St. Didier de Chalarone), on May 23, 608. On Feb. 11, 1620, the body of Didier was transferred to St. Peter and Paul's church at Vienne. Several other churches claim to possess some relics of Didier, who is commemorated by the Church of Rome as a saint on Feb. 11 and May 23. Lives of Didier have been published by Mombrice and Chifflet.—Hoefer, Biog. Générale, xiv, 101.

Didrachm (Greek δίδραχμον, Lat. didrachma—a double drachma, "tribute," Matt. xvii, 24), a silver coin equal to two Attic drachmæ, and also to the Jewish half shekel (Joseph. Ant. iii, 8, 2). It was therefore equivalent to about 1*s.* 4*d.* sterling, or 30 cents. See DRAM; STATER. By the law every Jew was required to pay half a shekel to the Temple (Exod. xxx, 13 sq.), and this amount is represented by the didrachma in Matt. xvii, 24, where it is used for the "tribute-money" demanded of Christ (compare Josephus, Ant. xviii, 9, 1). The Septuagint everywhere renders the "shekel" of the Old Testament by didrachma; but as the Attic drachma was equal to only half a shekel, it seems from this probable that the drachma of Alexandria was equal to two Attic drachmæ, or one of Ægina. See Frentz, De didrachmis a Christo solutis (Viteb. 1737); Schmidt, id. (Argent. 1701; Lips. 1757; also in his Dispp. p. 796–863); Leisner, Illustratio loci Matt. (Fridericopol. 1794); Paulus, Erwerbungsmittel des Stater (in his Theol. Journ. 1795, p. 859–73, 931–45). See TRIBUTE.

Did'ymus (Δίδυμος, the Twin), a surname (John xi, 16) of the apostle THOMAS (q. v.).

Didymus of Alexandria (called the Blind) was born at Alexandria about A.D. 311, and unfortunately lost his sight in the fourth or fifth year of his age; yet he arrived at great proficiency, it is said, in philosophy, rhetoric, mathematics, music, and divinity (Socrates, Eccl. Hist. iv, 25). He became master of the catechetical school of Alexandria, where his fame drew to him "numbers from distant parts to see him only;" and among his disciples were St. Jerome, Rufinus, Palladius, Evagrius, and Isidore. Anthony, the chief of the Recluses, visited him; and seeing him blind, said, "Let it nothing move you, O Didymus, that your bodily eyes are lost, for you are deprived only of the same kind of eyes as serve the basest insects for vision; but rather rejoice that you possess those with which angels are seen, and God himself is discerned." He died at Alexandria A.D. 396. He opposed the Arian doctrine, but seems to have embraced certain of the views of Origen, which caused him to be condemned at the fifth General Council of Constantinople. He was a voluminous writer, but most of his works are lost; there is a list of them in Jerome, De Vir. Illust. and in Fabricius, Bibliotheca Græca, ix, 269 sq. (ed. Harles). Those that are preserved are (1.) De spiritu Sancto (of the Holy Spirit), of which Jerome made a Latin version, which is preserved among his works. The Greek original is lost. It is given in Gallandii Bibliotheca Patrum, vol. vi; in Migne, Patrologia Græca, xxxix; and in separate editions, Cologne, 1531, 8vo; and (better) Helmstadt, 1614, 8vo. The book teaches that the Holy Spirit is not a mere name or property, but a real existence "in union with the Father and the Son, and different from all created things;" that it is the cause of wisdom, knowledge, and sanctification; and (Luke xi, 13) "that it is the fulness of the gifts of God; and all divine benefits subsist through it, since whatever gift God's grace bestows flows down from this fountain;" that it is unbounded, therefore no creature (Mark xiii, 11); that it is not of the nature a feast (Ant. i, 21, 2). The object for which this narrative is introduced into the book of Genesis probably is partly to explain the allusion in Gen. xlix, 5–7, and partly to exhibit the consequences of any association on the part of the Hebrews with the heathens about them. Ewald (Gesch. Isr. i, 40) arbitrarily assumes an actual fusion of the nomad Israelites with the aborigines of Shechem, on the ground that the daughters of the patriarchs are generally noticed with an ethnological view. It appears from Gen. xlvi, 15 that Dinah continued unmarried in the patriarch's family, and accompanied him into Egypt.—Kitto, s. v.; Smith, s. v. See JACOB.

Di'naïte (Chald. Dinaye', דִּינָיֵא, of unknown, but probably Median origin, used as a plur.; Sept. Δειναῖοι; Vulg. Dinæi), one of the foreign tribes colonized by the Assyrian general Asnapper in place of the deported Samaritans, and who afterwards joined in the opposition to the efforts of the returned Jews in rebuilding their city (Ezra iv, 9). Junius (Comm. in loc.), without any authority, identifies them with the people "known to geographers by the name Dennaní;" but there is only a Denna mentioned by ancient writers, and that an obscure town in Africa (Pliny, Hist. Nat. vi, 35). Schulthess (Paradies, p. 363) vaguely conjectures Daritis, the most southerly province of Media Major (Δαρεῖτις χώρα, Ptolemy, vi, 2, 6; Pliny, vi, 25; comp. Mannert, V, ii, 159), or Dera in Susiana (Δῆρα, Ptolemy, vi, 3, 5). See DURA. Ewald (Gesch. d. Volkes Israel, iii, 375) suggests the Median city Deinaber.

the free exercise of their respective modes of worship. The privilege was accorded to Lutherans, Calvinists, Arminians, and Greeks, but not to Anabaptists, Socinians, and Quakers. In the latter part of the sixteenth century, a large part of the people, and perhaps half of the nobility, were Protestants. "The Convention of Sandomir, concluded in 1570, united the Lutherans, Calvinists, and Bohemian Brethren into one Church—a union which had also a political tendency, and whose members obtained the same rights with the Catholics by the religious peace (pax dissidentium) sworn by the king in 1573. But the great mistake in not settling the mutual relations of the two religious parties gave rise to bloody contests. Although the rights of the dissidents were afterwards repeatedly confirmed, they were gradually repealed, particularly in 1717 and 1718, in the reign of Augustus II, when dissidents were deprived of the right of voting in the Diet. They lost still more some years afterwards (1733) under Augustus III; and in the Diet of Pacification, as it was called, in 1736, an old statute, requiring every Polish king to be of the Catholic Church, was revived. After the succession of the last king, Stanislaus Poniatowski, the dissidents brought their grievances before the Diet held in 1766, and were supported in their claims by Russia, Denmark, Prussia, and England. Russia, in particular, profited by the occasion to extend her influence in the affairs of Poland, supported them strongly by her mediation, in bringing about a new Convention in 1767, by which they were again placed on an equal footing with the Catholics. The Diet of 1768 repealed the decrees which had been formerly passed against them. The war against the confederates breaking out, however, and the kingdom being dismembered, nothing was accomplished until the year 1775, when the dissidents regained all their privileges, excepting the right of being elected senators or ministers of state" (Henderson's Buck, Theol. Dictionary, s. v.). See POLAND. The name Dissidents (German Dissidenten) is also sometimes used as the collective name for all adherents of religious denominations which have no legal existence in any particular state. See TOLERATION.

Distaff (פֶּלֶךְ, pe'lek, prop. a circle, e. g. a district or quarter of a city, "part," Neh. iii, 9-18; hence the whirl of a spindle, with which it is put in parallelism, Prov. xxxi, 19; once a "staff," or crutch, 2 Sam. iii, 29), the instrument used for twisting the thread in spinning by its twirl. See SPINDLE.

District, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, a territorial division of a Conference. Each Conference is divided into districts, including a convenient number of churches and societies (appointments); and each district is placed under the charge of a presiding elder. The bishops are empowered to form the districts according to their judgment. See Discipline of the M. E. Church, pt. ii, § 13; Stevens, Hist. of Methodism, bk. vii, ch. ii; and the art. PRESIDING ELDER.

Ditch (גֵּב, geb, a pit [as rendered in Jer. x, 31] or trench for cistern-water, 2 Kings iii, 16; מִקְוֶה, mikvah', a collection or pool of water, Isa. xxii, 11; שׁוּחָה, shuchah', Prov. xxiii, 27, or שַׁחַת, shach'ath, Job ix, xxxi, a pit, as elsewhere rendered, or hole in the ground, either for holding surplus water or for catching animals; like the Greek βόθυνος, Matt. xv, 14; Luke vi, 39). See CISTERN; POOL.

Ditheism, the worship of two gods.

(1.) This term was sometimes applied by the orthodox to the Arians, on the ground that they believed in one God, the Father, who is eternal, and one God, the Son, not eternal.

(2.) The term is also applied to the doctrine of two first principles, or gods, one good, the other evil. "The chiefest and most eminent asserters of this ditheistic doctrine of two self-existent principles in the universe were the Marcionites and the Manichæans, both of which sects, though they made some slight pretence to Christianity, yet were not by Christians owned for such. Some of the pagans also entertained the same opinion."—Cudworth, True Intellectual System (Andover, 1837), i, 290. See DUALISM.

Dithmar, JUSTUS CHRISTOPH, a German divine and jurist, was born March 13, 1677, at Rottenburg, in Hesse. After studying at the University of Marburg, where he applied himself to theology and the Oriental languages, he removed to Leyden, where he was offered a professorship, which he refused in order to accompany a family, in which he was tutor, to Frankfort on the Oder, where he first became professor of history, then of the law of nature, and finally of statistics and finance. He was made a member of the Royal Society of Berlin, and a councillor of the order of St. John. He died at Frankfort in 1737. Among his works are, Gregorii VII Pont. Romani Vita (Frankf. 1710, 8vo):—Historia Belli inter Imperium et Sacerdotium (ibid. 8vo):—Summa Capita Antiq. Judaicarum et Romanarum in usum Prælectionum privatarum (ibid. 4to).—Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, xiv, 827.

Priest of the Christian Doctrine.

became blind, but continued to preach and work for the extension of his society until his death in 1607. The successor of De Bus, Vigier, caused new trouble within the society by an attempt to convert the society into a regular "monastic congregation" (q. v.) by the introduction of solemn vows. This led pope Paul V to subject the society to the general of the Somaskians. This measure, however, increased the disturbance, and pope Innocent X on that account repealed the union, and subjected the priests of the Christian Doctrine to the diocesan bishops. These were henceforth again a society of secular priests, who only took simple vows. On the outbreak of the French Revolution, the society had in France 3 provinces, 15 houses, and 25 colleges. The society was abolished by the French Revolution; their last superior, M. de Bonnefour, died in 1806.

2. A Congregation of Sisters of the Christian Doctrine was likewise founded by Cæsar de Bus. They were more commonly called Ursulines of Toulouse.

3. A Congregation of Doctrinarians was founded in Italy about the middle of the 16th century by Marco de Sadis Cusani. The object of this society was likewise to give instruction. Benedict XIII and Benedict XIV gave to this society the direction of several elementary schools in the city of Rome. The society did not extend much beyond Rome, where they still give elementary instruction in a few schools.

Doctrines, History of (Germ. Dogmengeschichte), a special branch of Historical Theology.

1. The conception and the definition of History of Christian doctrines depend upon the conception and definition of what constitutes a Christian doctrine (dogma). For evangelical Christians, who believe that nothing should be received as Christian doctrine but what is clearly taught in the Word of God, the history of doctrine is a history of the efforts made by theologians and religious denominations to develop and shape the substance of the Christian faith into doctrinal statements; of deviations from the pure teachings of the Bible; and of the efforts to restore and defend the theology of the Bible. Roman Catholics, who believe in the sole infallibility of their Church, and deny that she has ever added anything to the teachings of Jesus, define history of doctrine as a scientific statement of the manner in which the several doctrines of the Church have been discussed, developed, and, at last, authoritatively defined. To the Rationalist, who does not believe in the immutability of the word of the Bible, the history of doctrines is nothing but a history of the doctrinal controversies in the Christian denominations. From the stand-point of evangelical theologians, the history of doctrines has an apologetic character with regard to Bible theology; the Roman Catholic theologians make it an apology of all the doctrines defined by the Church; while in the treatment by a Rationalistic author it will lose the character of a branch of Christian theology, and appear as simply historical. But, though conception and definition, and, consequently, mode of treatment and division of matter vary, all works on the history of doctrines embrace a history of the controversies which have been carried on in the Christian Church on doctrinal questions.

2. As regards the relation of the History of Doctrines to other branches of theological science, it is evidently a subdivision of Church history, separately treated on account of its special importance for theologians, and on account of its wide ramifications. It presupposes Biblical theology as its basis (or as its first period). As it recounts the formation and contents of public confessions of faith, and the distinguishing principles set forth in them, it forms itself the basis of symbolics, or comparative dogmatic theology, which stands to it in the same relation as Church statistics of any particular period stand to the advancing history of the Church. As the opinions of the prominent, especially the earliest, fathers of the Church are of considerable importance in the history of any Christian doctrine, it has frequently occasion to refer to the results of Patristics (q. v.). Of the "history of Heresies," the beginning will always have to be noticed in a comprehensive history of doctrine; its further progress only in so far as the heresies remain of importance for the Christian world at large. To a "general history of religion" it may have occasionally to refer; and with the history of philosophy and the history of Christian ethics it may sometimes have to travel over the same ground, though in the latter case it will treat the same subjects from a different point of view. Archæology, and the sciences auxiliary to Church history, such as universal history, ecclesiastical philology, ecclesiastical chronology, diplomatics, etc., also aid in furnishing materials.

3. The value of the History of Doctrines, in a scientific point of view, is evident. Though the history of no doctrine can have a decisive influence in determining the faith of an evangelical theologian, who to this end searches the Bible exclusively, it is for him the most important portion of the history of the Christian Church, leads him into a more minute contemplation, and frequently into a deeper insight of Biblical doctrines, and furnishes him with powerful weapons, both apologetic and polemic, against the various forms of error.

4. The periods of the history of doctrines have been differently determined by the writers on the subject. Hagenbach assumes the following five periods: 1. The Age of Apologetics, from the close of the apostolic age to the death of Origen (A.D. 80–254). 2. The Age of Polemics, from the death of Origen to John Damascenus (254–730). 3. The Age of Systems, from John Damascenus to the Reformation (Scholasticism in its widest sense) (730–1517). 4. The Age of Polemico-ecclesiastical Symbolism (the conflict of confessions), from the Reformation to the rise of the Philosophy of Leibnitz and Wolf in Germany (1517–1720). 5. The Age of Criticism, of Speculation, and of the antagonism between Faith and Knowledge, Philosophy and Christianity, Reason and Revelation, including the attempts to reconcile them, from the year 1720 to the present day. Neander's division is: 1. To Gregory the Great. 2. To the Reformation. 3. From the Reformation to the present time. Münscher, Engelhardt, and Meier adopt the division into Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern times. Klee (Rom. Cath.) coincides almost with Hagenbach. Baumgarten-Crusius (Rationalist) adopts in his Compendium six periods: 1. To the Council of Nice; Formation of the System of Doctrines by reflection and opinion. 2. To the Council of Chalcedon; Formation by the Church. 3. To Gregory VII; Confirmation of the System by the Hierarchy. 4. To the end of the 15th century; Confirmation by the Philosophy of the Church. 5. To the beginning of the 18th

abridgm. i, 230). All the above, both wild and reclaimed, there is every reason to believe, were known to the Hebrews (see Mishna, Baba Kamma, vii, 7), and although the Mosaic prohibition is presumed, yet anterior habits, and, in some measure, the necessity of their condition, must have caused cattle-dogs to be retained as property (Deut. xxiii, 18), for we find one of that race, or a house-dog, actually attending on travellers (Tobit v, 16; xi, 4). It is to be presumed that practically the street-dogs alone were considered as absolutely unclean; though all, as is the case among Mohammedans, were excluded from familiarity. (See Berjeau, Dogs on Old Sculptures, etc. Lond. 1863.) In Egypt, anterior to the Christian æra, domestic dogs were venerated. See NIBHAZ. They continued to be cherished till the Arabian conquest, when they, like the unowned street-dogs, fell under the imprecation of Mohammed, who with reluctance, though with good policy, modified his denunciations and sentence of destruction in favor of hunting-dogs, and even permitted game killed by them to be eaten, provided they had not devoured any portion of it (comp. Exod. xxii, 31). The words of the Lord Jesus to the Syrophœnician woman, and her answer (Matt. xv, 26, 27), certainly imply a domestication and domiciliation of dogs; but simple toleration of their presence is all that can be gathered. They lived on what they could get. Among the Moors of North Africa a similar position of the dog is occasionally seen. They "grant him, indeed, a corner of their tent, but this is all; they never caress him, never throw him anything to eat" (Poiret's Barbary, i, 253). Besides the cattle-dog, the Egyptian hound, and one or two varieties of greyhound, were most likely used for hunting—a pastime, however, which the Hebrews mostly pursued on foot. On the Assyrian monuments they are depicted in hunting scenes. The street-dog, without master, apparently derived from the rufous-cur, and in Egypt partaking of the mongrel greyhound, often more or less bare, with a mangy, unctuous skin, frequently with several teeth wanting, was, as it now is, considered a defiling animal. It is to animals of this class, which no doubt followed the camp of Israel, and hung on its skirts, that allusion is more particularly made in Exod. xxii, 31, for the same custom exists at this day, and the race of street-dogs still retains their ancient habits (Prosp. Alpin. Rer. Ægypt. iv, 8, p. 230 sq.; Russel, Aleppo, ii, 55; Rosenmüller, Morgen. iv, 76). A portion of the Cairo packs annually become hajis, and go and return with the caravan to Mecca, while others come from Damascus, acting in the same manner; and it is known that the pilgrims from the banks of the Indus are similarly attended to Kerbela: indeed, every caravan is so, more or less, by these poor animals. But with regard to the dogs that devoured Jezebel, and licked up Ahab's blood (1 Kings xxi, 23), they may have been of the wild races, a species of which is reported to have particularly infested the banks of the Kishon and the district of Jezreel. In illustration of this shocking end of Jezebel, it may be remarked that the more than half-wild street-dogs of the East, living upon their own resources, and without owners, soon make rapid clearance of the flesh of dead bodies left exposed, whether of human creatures or beasts (Bruce, Trav. iv, 81). Among other instances, it is recorded that a number of Indian pilgrims were drowned by the sinking of a ferry-boat in which they were crossing a river. Two days afterwards a spectator relates: "On my approaching several of these sad vestiges of mortality, I perceived that the flesh had been completely devoured from the bones by the Pariah dogs, vultures, and other obscene animals. The only portion of the several corpses I noticed that remained entire and untouched were the bottoms of the feet and insides of the hands, a circumstance that may afford a corroborative proof of the rooted antipathy the dog has to prey upon the human hands and feet. Why such should be the case remains a mystery" (Kitto's Daily Illust. in loc.). Stanley (S. and P. p. 350) states that he saw on the very site of Jezreel the descendants of the dogs that devoured Jezebel, prowling on the mounds without the walls for offal and carrion thrown out to them to consume; and Wood, in his Journal to the source of the Oxus, complains that the dog has not yet arrived at his natural position in the social state (compare Strabo, xvii, 821; Burckhardt, Trav. ii, 870). The dog was employed, however, in sacrifice by some ancient nations (Pausan. iii, 14, 9; Arnob. iv, 25; Julian, Orat. v, p. 176; Pliny, xviii, 69; comp. Saubert, De sacrific. c. 28, p. 518 sq.), and was even sometimes eaten (Plutarch, De sollert. animal. c. 2; Justin. xix, 1). The cities of the East are still greatly disturbed in the night by the howlings of Dominicale, a white veil anciently worn by women at the time of receiving the Eucharist. It has been disputed whether the dominicale was not a linen cloth which women, in the sixth century, were in some churches required to take to the Eucharist, and with which they covered the hand before the bread was laid upon it. Augustine may refer to this in one of the sermons usually ascribed to him, De Tempore, in which he says that it was customary for men to wash their hands when they communicate, and for women to bring their little linen cloths to receive the body of Christ. In the Council of Auxerre, A.D. 590, a rule was enacted that no woman should receive the Eucharist in her bare hand, but nothing further is prescribed. The best authorities, however, are of opinion that the dominicale was a veil for the head.—Farrar, Eccles. Dictionary, s. v.; Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. xv, ch. v, § 7.

Dominical Letter, the letter in our almanacs which marks the Lord's Day (Dies Domini), usually printed in a capital form. In the calendar, the first seven letters of the alphabet are applied to the days of the week, the letter A being always given to the 1st of January, whatsoever that day may be, and the others in succession to the following days. If the year consisted of three hundred and sixty-four days, making an exact number of weeks, no change would ever take place in these letters. Thus, supposing the 1st of January in any given year to be Sunday, all the Sundays would be represented by A; not only in that year, but in all succeeding. There being, however, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, the first letter is again repeated on the 31st of December, and, consequently, the Dominical, or Sunday letter for the following year will be G. The retrocession of the letters will, for the same reason, continue every year, so as to make F the Dominical letter of the third, etc. If every year were common, the process would continue regularly, and a cycle of seven years would be sufficient to restore the same letters to the same days as before. But the intercalation of a day every bissextile or leap year causes a variation. The leap-year, containing three hundred and sixty-six days, will throw the Dominical letter of the following year back two letters; so that, if the Dominical letter at the beginning of the year be C, the Dominical letter of the next year will be A. This alteration is not effected by dropping a letter altogether, but by changing the Dominical letter at the end of February, where the intercalation takes place. In consequence of this change every fourth year, twenty-eight years must elapse before a complete revolution of the Dominical letter can take place; and it is on this fact that the period of the solar cycle is founded. The rules for finding the Dominical letter for any year are given in the Book of Common Prayer.—Hook, Ch. Dict. s. v. See CYCLE.

Dominicans, an order of mendicants founded by Dominic (q. v.) de Guzman about the year 1215. In England they were generally called Black Friars from their garments, in France Jacobins, from the fact that their first French house was in the Rue St. Jacques, at Paris. They called themselves commonly Preaching Friars (Fratres Prædicatores), from their office of preaching.

I. History.—Dominic projected the order when he was preaching against the Albigenses (q. v.); but the Council of Lateran, in 1215, declared itself against any increase of the monastic orders. Nevertheless Innocent III was prevailed upon to approve of the order on condition that it should assimilate itself as closely as possible to one already in existence. The successor of Innocent, Honorius III, was less reluctant, and confirmed the Dominicans as a new and independent order. It spread rapidly over all Christian countries. In 1221 thirteen of the friars went to England for the purpose of establishing the order, and Stephen Langton, then archbishop of Canterbury, giving his approval, they fixed their first house at Oxford. Their second house was in London. At the time of the dissolution of the monasteries under Henry VIII there were 58 houses in England and Wales. When the second general chapter was held, in 1221, at Bologna, 60 convents, belonging to eight provinces, were represented, and a great many friars were sent out to establish new houses. In 1278 the number of their convents amounted to 417. In 1233 the Inquisition (q. v.) was transferred to them by the Pope. This gave them a powerful and pernicious influence in Spain, Portugal, Italy, and France. They showed so much eagerness in hunting up and prosecuting heretics that a popular pun changed the name Dominicans into Domini canes (the dogs of the Lord). Although endowed in 1272 with all the privileges of the mendicant orders, they soon gave up begging, and, after being allowed in 1425 to accept donations, they accumulated great wealth. Together with the Franciscans, they became the chief representatives of the theological science of the Middle Ages, occupied a large number of the theological chairs at the universities, and became in most controversies not only the rivals, but also the bitter opponents of the Franciscans. The greatest theologian among them in the Middle Ages was Thomas Aquinas (q. v.), whom they have ever since followed as a standard authority. Among their other celebrities are Albertus Magnus, Eccard, Tauler, Suso, Savonarola, Las Casas, Vincent Ferrier, and Vincent of Beauvais. As theologians, they were mostly Nominalists, Augustinians, and opponents of the Immaculate Conception. In literature in general they have had great influence, as the Magister sacri palatii at Rome, in whose hands is the censorship of books, has always been taken from their order. They secured great popular favor not only by their preaching, but by the establishment of an order of tertiarians, open to laymen. The people were also gained by them especially by the spreading of the use of the Rosary (q. v.), which was introduced by them, and which became, in consequence of the many indulgences attached to it by the popes, a very popular form of worship. The Dominicans also belonged to the most zealous laborers in the foreign missions of the Roman Church. Many of their members were sent to the East; and in Armenia, in particular, they succeeded in uniting a great many Armenians with the Roman Church. After the discovery and conquest of America by the Spaniards, the Dominicans protected the natives from being enslaved, but gave, on the other hand, the first impulse to the importation of slaves from Africa. In America, and in the West and East Indies, they surpassed all other

(Prov. xxvi, 14). Doors were fastened by a lock (Cant. v, 5), or by a bar (Judg. xvi, 3; Job xxxviii, 10). Those made of iron and brass were not used except as a security to the gates of fortified places or repositories of valuables (Isa. xlv, 2, 3). The lock was nothing more than a wooden slide attached to one of the folds, which entered into a hole in the door-post, and was secured there by teeth cut into it, or catches. Two strings passed through an orifice leading to the external side of the door. A man going out, by the aid of one of these strings moved the slide into its place in the post, where it was so fastened among the teeth, or catches, as not to be drawn back. The one coming in, who wished to unlock, had a wooden key, sufficiently large, and crooked, like a sickle. It was called מַפְתֵּחַ, miphtach' (Judg. iii, 25). He thrust the key through the orifice of the door, or key-hole, lifted up the slide so as to extricate it from the catches, and, taking hold of the other string, drew it back, and thus entered. Keys were not made of metal, except for the rich and powerful, and these were sometimes adorned with an ivory handle. A key of this kind, in the days of the Hebrew monarchs, was assigned to the steward of the royal palace as a mark of his office, and he carried it on his shoulder (Isa. xxii, 22). The key-hole was sometimes so large as to admit a person's finger through it, and enable him to lift the slide; in that case he stood in no absolute need of a key to enter (Cant. v, 4). See KEY. Among the ancient Egyptians doors were frequently stained so as to imitate foreign wood. They were either of one or two valves, turning on pins of metal, and were secured within by bars and bolts. Some of the bronze pins have been discovered in the tombs of Thebes, and two of them, after Wilkinson, are figured below (2, 3). They were fastened to the wood with nails of the same metal. See HINGE. The stone lintels and floor behind the threshold of the tombs and temples still exhibit the holes in which the pins turned, as well as those of the bolts and bars, and the recess for receiving the opening valves. The folding doors had bolts in the centre, sometimes above as well as below; a bar was placed across from one wall to the other, and in many cases they were secured by wooden locks passing over the centre (above cut, fig. 4) at the junction of the two folds. "It is difficult (remarks Sir J. G. Wilkinson) to say if these last were opened by a key, or merely slided backward and forward like a bolt; but if they were really locks, they were probably upon the principle of those now used in Egypt, which are of wood, and opened by a key furnished with several pins answering to a smaller number that fall down into the hollow movable tongue, into which the key is introduced when they open or fasten the lock." See LOCK. For greater security, they are also occasionally sealed with a mass of clay. This was also a custom of the ancient Egyptians, as appears from Herodotus (ii, 121), from tombs actually so closed at Thebes, and from the sculptures, as in the first cut above, fig. 3, where the door is thus closed and sealed. To this custom there is an allusion in Job. See CLAY. At a later period, when iron came into general use, keys were made of that metal, of the shape shown in the above cut, fig. 4. Of the kind thus indicated were probably the lock and key which fastened the summer-parlor of king Eglon (Judg. iii, 23, 25). In this case Ehud locked the door and took away the key; but when the servants became alarmed they easily opened it with another key, which suggests that the lock, as in ancient Egypt or the modern East, was nothing more than a peculiarly constructed open bolt of wood, which the wooden or metal key was adapted to raise and thrust back. The forms of the Egyptian doors may be seen from the cuts. (See Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. abridgm. i, 7-23.) The chief entrance to houses was through a pyramidal pylon on a projecting porch of columns, whose capitals were often ornamented with ribbons. Over the doorway was sometimes a brief hieroglyphical legend (Wathen, p. 101). This last circumstance reminds one of the writing on their doors recommended to the Israelites, as noticed below. A comparison of the ancient Egyptian doors with those now used in the East will probably suggest no incorrect notion of the provision among the ancient Hebrews in this respect. A sort of intermediate idea arising from this comparison will be found to furnish very satisfactory illustrations of most of the passages of Scripture which relate to the subject. (See Lane's Mod. Eg. i, 9, 18.) Doors are generally unpainted throughout Western Asia and in Egypt. In the interior of houses it is not unusual to see curtains instead of doors, especially in summer. This helps to keep the apartment cool, and also enables servants to enter without noise. This custom originated in the use of tents. Accordingly we find that all the entrances of the tabernacle had curtains, although the framework was of wood (Exod. xxvi, 31–33, 36, 37); and even in the Temple a curtain or "vail" formed the separation between the holy and the most holy place. See HOUSE. The word "door," in reference to a tent, expresses the opening made by dispensing with the cloths in front of the tent, which is then supported only by the hinder and middle poles (Gen. xviii, 2; Burckhardt, Notes on Bed. i, 42).

Among the figurative allusions to doors, it may be mentioned that, in Hosea ii, 15, the valley of Achor is called "a door of hope," because there, immediately after the execution of Achan, the Lord said to Joshua, "Fear not, neither be dismayed;" and from that time Joshua carried on his conquests with uninterrupted success. Paul, in 1 Cor. xvi, 9; 2 Cor. ii, 12; Col. iv, 3, uses the symbol of a door opened, to signify the free exercise and propagation of the Gospel. Our Lord applies the term to himself, "I am the door" (John x, 9). The "door opened in heaven" signifies the beginning of a new kind of government (Rev. iv, 1); and in general the opening of anything is said when it may act suitably to its quality; the shutting of anything is the stopping of its use (Wemyss, Symbol. Dict. s. v.). See GATE.

DOOR-KEEPER (שׁוֹעֵר, shŏer', 1 Chron. xv, 23, 24, a gate-tender, or "porter," as elsewhere rendered; but in Psa. lxxxiv, 11, סָפַף, saphaph', to sit at the threshold; Sept. παραπίπτεσθαι; Vulg. abjectus esse; Gr. θυρωρός, John xviii, 16, 17; elsewhere likewise "porter"), a person appointed to keep the street-door leading by an alley-way to the interior entrance of an Oriental house (q. v.). This was originally doubtless a male, but in later times, in imitation perhaps of Greek and Roman usages (see Kitto, Pict. Bible, note on John l. c.; no such custom, however, appears in classical writers; see Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiq. p. 514 b, 527 b), a female janitress or portress often held this post (John xviii, 16; Acts xii, 13). See PORTER. In Psa. lxxxiv, 10, the word "door-keeper" does not convey the proper meaning of the original, because the preference of the Psalmist was evidently given to a very humble situation, whereas that of a door-keeper, in Eastern estimation, is truly respectable and confidential. The gods are always represented as having door-keepers, who were of great dignity and power, as they also fought against other deities. In the heathen temples there are images near the entrance called kaval karan, guards, or door-keepers. See ANUBIS; ASP. Kings and great men, also, have officers whose business it is to stand at the door or gate as keepers of the entrance. The most dignified native of Ceylon is the maha modeliar of the governor's gate, to whom all others must make obeisance. The word door-keeper, therefore, does not convey the idea of humility, but of honor. The marginal reading of our version, however, to "sit at the threshold," at once strikes an Eastern mind as a situation of deep humility. See the poor heathen devotee; he goes and sits near the threshold of his temple. Look at the beggar; he sits or prostrates himself at the threshold of the door or gate till he shall have gained his suit. "I am in great trouble; I will go and lie down at the door of the temple." "Friend, you appear to be very ill." "Yes." "Then go and prostrate yourself at the threshold of the temple." The Psalmist therefore probably refers to the attitude of a beggar or suppliant at the threshold of the house of the Lord as being preferable to the splendid dwellings of the wicked. See BEGGAR.

DOOR-KEEPERS (ostiarii), in the ancient Church, a class of church officers forming the lowest clerical order. Their duties were to open and close the doors, not only at the termination of religious worship, but during the services, especially after the missa catechumenorum (q. v.). In later times, in the Roman Church, their duties became nearly those of the modern sexton, viz. to take care of the church ornaments and vessels, to ring the bell, to sweep the church, etc. The customary forms of ordination are prescribed in the fourth council of Carthage; and the keys were delivered to them by the bishop, with the injunction, "Behave thyself as one who must give account to God of the things that are kept locked under these keys." Their ordinary name was πυλωροί, ostiarii, and sometimes mansionarii and janitores.—Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. iii, ch. vi.

DOOR-POST (סַף, saph, Ezek. xli, 16, the sill or "threshold," as elsewhere usually rendered; מַשְׁקוֹף, mashkoph', Ezek. xii, 7; the lintel, as elsewhere rendered). In Deut. vi, 9, Moses enjoined upon the Israelites to write the divine commands upon the posts (מְזוּזוֹת, mezuzoth', invariably so rendered) of their doors, a practice which is understood literally by the modern Jews (Thomson, Land and Book, i, 141). It is at this day customary in Mohammedan Asia for extracts from the Koran, and moral sentences, to be wrought in stucco over doors and gates, and as ornamental scrolls to the interior of apartments. The elegant characters of the Arabian and Persian alphabets, and the good taste with which they are applied in running scrolls, the characters being usually white, raised on a blue ground, and intermixed with gilding, have a very pleasing effect, particularly in interior ornament. This custom must have been very ancient, for Moses here very evidently alludes to it. We understand the injunction not as imperative upon the Hebrews to write on their doors, but as enjoining them, if they did write at all, to write sentences of the law. He suggests this as a means of inculcating the law upon their children, whence it seems that he took it for granted that the children would be taught to read. "Among us," says Michaelis, "where, by the aid of printing, books are so abundantly multiplied, and may be put into the hands of every child, such measures would be quite superfluous; but if we would enter into the ideas of Moses, we must place ourselves in an age when the book of the law could only come into the hands of a few opulent people." The later Jews have exercised their usual ingenuity in misunderstanding this injunction. They conceive the observance to be imperative, and they act on it as follows: Their mezuzoth, or door-schedules, are slips of parchment, on which are written the passages Deut. vi, 4–9, and xi, 13–20; these slips are rolled up, and on the outside is written the Hebrew word שדי, shaddai, or "the Almighty," one of the names appropriated to God. This roll they put into a reed or hollow cylinder of lead, in which a hole is cut for the word shaddai to appear, and the tube is then fastened to the door-post by a nail at each end. As the injunction is in the plural form, they conceive that a mezuzah should be placed on every door of a house. It is usually fixed to the right-hand door-post, and those Israelites who wish to be considered particularly devout usually touch or even kiss it as they pass. The Talmud ascribes great merit to having the mezuzah fixed on the door-post, and describes it as a preservative from sin. See MEZUZOTH.

DOORS OF THE CHURCH. To insure secrecy in worship, the ancient Christians constructed the doors of their churches with peculiar care. The early fathers, from this usage, derived abundant metaphors, relating to admission to the church, to heaven, etc. There were generally three principal entrances, in imitation of the Jewish Temple. Sometimes the terms πύλη, porta, and θύρα, janua, were interchanged; but, for the most part, the principal entrance, at the west, over against the altar, was called, by way of eminence, πύλη, and πύλη ὡραία, or βασιλική. Men and women entered by different doors. The doors were constructed of the most durable wood, or of brass richly ornamented. The date of the building or dedication of the church was usually inscribed on the doors. Sometimes the doors bore inscriptions of various kinds, of which the following may be taken as a specimen. On the outside,

> "Pax tibi sit, quicunque Dei penetralia Christi > Pectore pacifico candidus ingrederis."

On the inside,

> "Quisquis ab æde Dei, perfectis ordine votis, > Egrederis, remea corpore, corde manc."

It was customary, in early times, to place on the doors the names of all excommunicated persons; at a later period, the names of persons intending marriage were posted up in like manner. This was also the place for affixing all proclamations and decisions of the Church, as well as all public notices.—Riddle, Christian Antiquities, bk. vi, ch. v, § 6; Coleman, Christian Antiquities, ch. ix, § 10.

Doph'kah (Heb. Dophkah', דָּפְקָה, according to Gesenius, a knocking; accord. to Fürst, cattle-driving; Sept. Ῥαφακά, by error of ר for ד; Vulg. Dophca), the eighth place of encampment of the Israelites in coming out of Egypt (Num. xxxiii, 12). It was situated in the desert of Sin, on the eastern shore of the western arm of the Red Sea, probably at the mouth of Wady Feirân. See EXODE. Pococke (East, i, 235) thinks it lies east of Thor, in Wady Hibran; but this is apparently conjecture. Fürst (Heb. Handw. s. v.), after Seetzen (Zach's Correspond. xxvii, 71), says it is the modern el-Tobbacha; which, if the el-Tubukah of Robinson (Res. ii, 388, 648), is far away, and probably the ancient Tagoba (q. v.); but if in the valley Kineh (Keil, Exod. p. 76), would be precisely opposite our location (Robinson, i, 121, 122).

Dor (Heb. id., דּוֹר, a dwelling, but דֹּאר in Josh. xvii, 11; 1 Kings iv, 11; Sept. Δώρ, but joins with preceding word נָפַת or נָפֹת, in Josh. xi, 2 Νεφεδδώρ, in Josh. xii, 22 [second clause] Ναφαδδώρ, in 1 Kings iv, 11 Νεφζαδώρ; Vulg. Dor; the Dora, τὰ Δῶρα, of the Apocrypha and Josephus, who, as well as Greek writers, also calls it Dorus, Δῶρος), an ancient royal city of the Canaanites (Josh. xii, 23), whose ruler was an ally of Jabin, king of Hazor, against Joshua (Josh. xi, 1, 2). It was probably the most southern settlement of the Phœnicians (Scylax, p. 42, ascribes it to the Sidonians) on the coast of Syria (Joseph. Life, p. 8; Ant. xv, 9, 6). Josephus describes it as a maritime city (War, i, 21, 5) on the west border of Manasseh and the north border of Dan (Ant. v, 1, 22; viii, 2, 3; War, i, 7, 7), near Mount Carmel (Ap. ii, 10). One old author tells us that it was founded by Dorus, a son of Neptune, while another affirms that it was built by the Phœnicians, because the neighboring rocky shore abounded in the small shell-fish from which they got the purple dye (Reland, Palæst. p. 739). It appears to have been within the territory of the tribe of Asher, though allotted to Manasseh (Josh. xvii, 11; Judg. i, 27). The original inhabitants were never expelled, but during the prosperous reigns of David and Solomon they were made tributary (Judg. i, 27, 28), and the latter monarch stationed at Dor one of his twelve purveyors (1 Kings iv, 11). Reland (Palæst. p. 744) thinks it is the Dura (Δοῦρα) mentioned by Polybius (v, 409) as the scene of the victory of Antiochus Epiphanes over Ptolemy Philometor. Tryphon, the murderer of Jonathan Maccabæus and usurper of the throne of Syria, having sought an asylum in Dor, the city was besieged and captured by Antiochus Si Doubt (dubito, to go two ways). "Man knows some things and is ignorant of many things, while he is in doubt as to other things. Doubt is that state of mind in which we hesitate as to two contradictory conclusions, having no preponderance of evidence in favor of either. Philosophical doubt has been distinguished as provisional or definitive. Definitive doubt is scepticism. Provisional or methodical doubt is a voluntary suspending of our judgment for a time, in order to come to a more clear and sure conclusion. This was first given as a rule in philosophical method by Des Cartes, who tells us that he began by doubting everything, discharging his mind of all preconceived ideas, and admitting none as clear and true till he had subjected them to a rigorous examination. Doubt is some degree of belief, along with the consciousness of ignorance, in regard to a proposition. Absolute disbelief implies knowledge: it is the knowledge that such or such a thing is not true. If the mind admits a proposition without any desire for knowledge concerning it, this is credulity; if it is open to receive the proposition, but feels ignorance concerning it, this is doubt. As knowledge increases, doubt diminishes, and belief or disbelief strengthens (Taylor, Elements of Thought)." —Fleming, Vocabulary of Philosophy, Phila. 1860. See DES CARTES; SCEPTICISM.

Doubts, DISSOLVING OF, Chald. מְשָׁרֵא קְטִרִין, mesharé' kitrin', to unbind knots, i. e. solve problems; a form of speech still commonly employed in the East for the determination of difficult questions (see Roberts, Burder, Bush, Illustra. in loc.).

Dough (בָּצֵק, batsek', so called from swelling in fermentation, Exod. xii, 34, 39; Jer. vii, 18; Hos. vii, 4; "flour," 2 Sam. xiii, 8; עֲרִיסוֹת, arisoth', grits, so called as being pounded, Num. xv, 20, 21; Neh. x, 37; Ezek. xliv, 30). See COOK. The dough, we are told, which the Israelites had prepared for baking, and on which it appears they subsisted after they left Egypt for a month, was carried away by them in their kneading-troughs on their shoulders (Exod. xii, 34). See KNEADING-TROUGH. In Oriental countries, and indeed in all tropical climates, the process of preparing the materials for baking is very expeditious, and generally performed in the house for each meal, including grinding the meal. See BREAD. The fermentation is often dispensed with altogether. See LEAVEN. From Hos. vii, 8, it appears that the dough had to be turned in the process of baking, in order to be well done. See BAKE.

Dougharty, GEORGE, a Methodist Episcopal minister of the South Carolina Conference. The date of his birth is wanting. He entered the itinerancy in 1798, was presiding elder 1802-6, became superannuate in 1807, and died March 23, 1807, at Wilmington, N. C. Mr. Dougharty was one of the greatest preachers of his Conference. His mind and memory were capacious; he had a large fund of knowledge, was indefatigable in labor and study, and "totally dead to the world." He was far in advance of his associates with regard to education, and labored in 1803 to establish a Methodist academy in South Carolina. In 1801 he was attacked by a mob, gathered in the interest of slavery in Charleston. They dragged him to a pump, and pumped water on him till he was nearly exhausted, when a heroic woman interfered and kept the mob at bay till help arrived and saved him from probable death.—Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, vols. iii and iv; Minutes of Conferences, i, 155; Deems, Annals of Southern Methodism, p. 228; Sprague, Annals, vii, 290.

Doughty, John, was born at Martley, near Worcester, England, about 1598; was educated at Oxford, and became fellow of Merton College. About 1631 he was made rector of Lapworth, Warwickshire; and after the restoration of Charles II he was appointed prebendary of Westminster and rector of Cheam, Surrey. He died at Westminster, Dec. 25, 1672. He published, under the Latinized name Doughtæus, Analecta Sacra, sive excursus philologici breves super div. S. Scripturæ locis (Lond. 1658-60, 2 vols. 8vo); 2d ed. with Knatchbull's Animadver. in N. T. (Amst. 1694, 8vo); De Calicibus eucharisticis vet. Christianorum (Bremæ, 1694, 8vo).—Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, i, 949; Orme, Bibliotheca Biblica.

Doughty, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister of the Philadelphia Conference, was born in Philadelphia in January, 1794, was converted in 1816, entered the itinerancy in 1823, was stationed successively at New Brunswick, N. J., and at St. George's, Philadelphia, and died at Wilmington, Del., Sept. 17, 1828. Mr. Doughty was one of the most popular, useful, and eloquent preachers of his time. He was an eloquent advocate for the benevolent institutions of the Church, especially for Sunday-schools, of which he was a distinguished promoter, both before and after his entrance to the regular ministry. His literary and theological requirements and talents were of a high order, as his published Sermons in the Methodist Magazine sufficiently attest, especially one upon "Instability in Religion." He was rapidly rising in influence and usefulness when he was suddenly cut down.—Minutes of Conferences, ii, 38; Sprague, Annals, vii, 672.

Douglas, Gawin, or Gavin, bishop of Dunkeld, Scotland, was the third son of Archibald, earl of Angus, and was born at Brechin in 1474, or the beginning of 1475. He received his education first in his own country, and then on the Continent. On his return to Scotland he was made provost of the collegiate church of St. Giles, at Edinburgh, and afterwards abbot of Aberbrothick. He was also nominated by the queen regent to the archbishopric of St. Andrews, but this dignity he never obtained, owing to the refusal of the pope to confirm the appointment. He was, however, confirmed as bishop of Dunkeld through the interest of Henry VIII with pope Leo X. His administration fell in a troubled time, and after many vexations he retired to England, where Henry VIII granted him a pension. He died of the plague at London in 1522. Bishop Douglas translated the Æneid of Virgil into Scottish verse, printed at London in 1553, 4to. His other works are a poem called The Palace of Honor, 4to, and King Hart, printed in 1786. His Virgil was reprinted at Edinburgh in folio, with a glossary, in 1710.—Kippis, Biographia Britannica, v, 338.

Douglas, John, D.D., bishop of Salisbury, was born in 1721 at Pittenweem, Fifeshire, and was educated at Baliol College, Oxford. He was chaplain in the Guards at the battle of Fontenoy, became canon and dean of Westminster in 1762, was made bishop of Carlisle in 1787, and in 1791 was transferred to Salisbury. He died May 18, 1807. Dr. Douglas was intimate with Dr. Johnson, and all the most celebrated of his contemporaries. He was an accurate scholar and critic, and exposed Lander in his Milton no Plagiary, and ably attacked Hume in his Criterion of Miracles. Both these essays are given in Douglas's Select Works (Salisbury, 1820, 4to). He also wrote largely against Archibald Bower, aiming to show that he was a literary and religious impostor, in his Six Letters to Sheldon (Lond. 1756, 8vo), and in his Bower and Tillemont compared (London, 1757, 8vo). A new edition of his Criterion appeared from the Clarendon Press (1833). See Elliott, Delineation of Romanism (Lond. 1851), p. 525; Van Mildert, Boyle Lectures.

Douglass, Thomas Logan, an eminent Methodist Episcopal minister of the Virginia Conference, and afterwards of the Tennessee Conference, was born in Person County, N. C., July 8, 1781, entered the Virginia Conference on trial in 1801, traveled on important circuits and districts until 1813, was then transferred to the Tennessee Conference, and died near Franklin, Tenn., April 9, 1843. Mr. Douglass was eminently useful both as a preacher and presiding elder, and his influence was very great in the Conferences with which he was connected during more than thirty years. His sermons were pregnant with thought, and his appeals were full of pathos. Few preachers of his time had such command of their hearers. He was an excellent disciplinarian, and thoroughly versed in the history and economy of Methodism. "His piety was uniform and deep, his temper sweet," and his old age was bright and blessed. He was several times elected a delegate to the General Conference.—Minutes of Conferences, iii, 457; Sprague, Annals, vii, 352; Summers, Biographical Sketches, p. 103.

Dove (יוֹנָה, yonah', prob. referring to the sexual warmth of that bird; περιστερά; both terms occasionally rendered "pigeon"). There are probably several species of doves or pigeons included in the Hebrew name with its Greek equivalent. It may contain all those that inhabit Palestine, exclusive of the turtle-doves properly so called. See Turtle-dove. In modern systems, the doves are included in the natural family of Columbidæ, or pigeon tribe, which comprises the pigeons, doves, and turtles; but naturalists are still divided as to the proper place of the family, and the limits of the respective subdivisions (see Bochart, Hieroz. ii, 542 sq.). Syria possesses several species of pigeon: the Columba anas, or stock-dove; C. palumbus, or ring-dove; C. domestica, livia; the common pigeon in several varieties, such as the Barbary, Turkish or Persian carrier, crisp, and shaker. These are still watched in their flight in the same manner as anciently their number, gyrations, and other manœuvres were observed by soothsayers. The wild species, as well as the turtle-doves, migrate from Palestine to the south, but stock and ring-doves are not long absent. In the wild state, doves generally build their nests in the holes or clefts of the rocks, or in excavated trees, but they are easily taught submission and familiarity with mankind, and, when domesticated, build in structures erected for their accommodation, called "dove-cotes" (comp. Cant. ii, 14; Jer. xlviii, 28; Isa. lx, 8). Doves are kept in a domesticated state in many parts of the East. The pigeon-cot is a universal feature in the houses of Upper Egypt. In Persia pigeon-houses are erected at a distance from the dwellings, for the purpose of collecting the dung as manure. The allusion in Isa. lx, 8, is to the immense compact masses of these birds that Eastern travellers describe, as they are seen flying to their cotes or places of general resort. They sometimes resemble a distant heavy cloud, and are so dense as to obscure the rays of the sun. Stanley (Syr. and Pal. p. 257), speaking of Ascalon as the haunt of the Syrian Venus, says: "Her temple is destroyed, but the sacred doves—sacred by immemorial legends on the spot, and celebrated there even as late as Eusebius—still fill with their cooings the luxuriant gardens which grow in the sandy hollow within the ruined walls." See below. The dove has been by some considered (though in an obscure passage) as an early national standard (Psa. lxviii, 13), being likewise held in pagan Syria and Phœnicia to be an ensign and a divinity, resplendent with silver and gold, and so venerated as to be regarded as holy, and forbidden as an article of food. (See Engel, Kypros, ii, 184; Creuzer, Symbol.

Syrian pink-and-white Carrier-dove, and Phœnician sacred Ensign of the Dove.

ii, 70–77.) It is supposed that the dove was placed upon the standards of the Assyrians and Babylonians in honor of Semiramis. This explains the expression in Jer. xxv, 38, "from before the fierceness of the dove," i. e. the Assyrian (comp. Jer. xlvi, 16; l, 16). There is, however, no representation of the dove among the sculptures of Nineveh, so that it could hardly have been a common emblem of the nation at the time when they were executed; and the word in the above three passages of Jeremiah admits another interpretation (Gesenius, Thesaur. p. 601 a). By the Hebrew law, however (see Mishna, Yom Tob, i, 3; Babâ Bathra, ii, 5 sq.; Bab-kamma, vii, 7), doves and turtle-doves were the only birds that could be offered in sacrifice, and they were usually selected for that purpose by the less wealthy (Gen. xv, 9; Lev. v, 7;

xii, 6; Luke ii, 24); and, to supply the demand for them, dealers in these birds sat about the precincts of the Temple (Matt. xxi, 12, etc.). The brown wood-dove is said to be intended by the Hebrew name; but all the sacred birds, unless expressly mentioned, were pure white, or with some roseate feathers about the wing coverts, such as are still frequently bred from the carrier-pigeon of Scandiroon. It is this kind which Tibullus notices (i, 7). The carrier-birds are represented in Egyptian bas-reliefs, where priests are shown letting them fly on a message. All pigeons in their true wild plumage have iridescent colors about the neck, and often reflected flashes of the same colors on the shoulders, which are the source of the silver and gold feathers ascribed to them in poetical diction; and thence the epithet of purple bestowed upon them all, though most applicable to the vinous and slaty-colored species. This beauty of plumage is alluded to in Psa. lxviii, 19, where the design of the Psalmist is to present, in contrast, the condition of the Hebrews at two different periods of their history: in the day of their affliction and calamity they were covered as it were with shame and confusion, but in the day of their prosperity they should resemble the cleanest and most beautiful of birds. The dove was the harbinger of reconciliation with God (Gen. viii, 8, 10, etc.), when Noah sent one from the ark to ascertain if the waters of the Deluge had assuaged. The association of the dove and the olive is not only natural, but highly emblematical (Thomson, Land and Book, i, 69). The dove is frequently mentioned in the Scriptures as the emblem of purity and innocence, and so it doubtless was viewed by the Psalmist (Psa. lv, 6–8), although with a special allusion to the swiftness of that bird's flight (comp. Sophocl. Œd. Col. 1081; Eurip. Bacch. 1090). By an almost anthropomorphic extension of this idea, the dove is, figuratively, next to man, the most exalted of animals, symbolizing the Holy Spirit, a sentiment that appears to be couched in the description of creation (Gen. i, 2), where the Spirit is represented as brooding ("moved") over the surface of chaos. (See treatises on this point by Augusti, Die Taube, in Gieseler and Lücke's Zeitschr. iii, 56–64; Moller, De columba, Frib. 1721; Schmid, De columbis, Helmst. 1711, 1731; Schwebel, De columbarum cultu, Onold. 1767; E. F. Wernsdorf, De simulacro columbæ, Viteb. 1773; Id. De columba sancta Syrorum, Helmst. 1761; J. C. Wernsdorf, De columba, Helmst. 1770; Ziebich, De columba pentecostali, Viteb. 1737.) The Holy Spirit descended, as a dove descends, upon our Saviour at his baptism—visibly with that peculiar hovering motion which distinguishes the descent of a dove (Matt. iii, 16; Mark i, 10; Luke iii, 22; John i, 32). (See the treatises on this incident, in Latin, by Adler [Sorav. 1822], Böhmer [Jen. 1727], Christ [Jen. 1727], Riess [Marb. 1736], Rechenberg [Cob. 1741], Varemus [Kil. 1671; Viteb. 1713, 1728], Ziebich [Ger. 1772]; in German by Schulthess [in Winer's Krit. Jour. iv, 257–294].) The dove is also a noted symbol of tender and devoted affection, especially in the Canticles (i, 15; ii, 14, etc.). The conjugal fidelity of the dove has been celebrated by every writer who has described or alluded to her character (Cant. i, 15). She admits but of one mate, and never forsakes him until death puts an end to their union. The black pigeon, when her mate dies, obstinately rejects another, and continues in a widowed state for life. Hence among the Egyptians a black pigeon was the symbol of a widow who declined to enter again into the marriage relation. These facts have been transferred, by later authors, to the widowed turtle, which, deaf to the solicitations of another mate, continues, in mournful strains, to deplore her loss until death puts a period to her sorrows. (On the emblematical uses of the dove, see farther Wemyss, Symbol. Dict. s. v.) The cooing of the dove, when solitary, is often alluded to in Scripture (Isa. xxxviii, 14; lix, 11; Nah. ii, 7). Comp. PIGEON.

In Christian art, the dove is employed as the emblem of the Holy Ghost, following the literal interpretation, which is doubtless the true one, of Matt. iii, 16. After images and pictures began to be allowed in churches, the Holy Ghost was represented by the effigies of a silver dove hovering over the altar, and the baptistery had the same. The place over the altar where it was suspended was called peristerion, from περιστερά, a dove (Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. viii, ch. vi, § 19).

"From the dove being a symbol of purity, it is generally represented white, with its beak and claws red, as they occur in nature. In the older pictures, a golden nimbus surrounds its head, the nimbus being frequently divided by a cross, either red or black. In stained-glass windows we see the dove with seven rays proceeding from it, terminating in seven stars, significative of the seven gifts of the Holy Spirit. Holding an olive-branch, the dove is an emblem of peace. When seen issuing from the lips of dying saints and martyrs, it represents the human soul purified by suffering. A dove with six wings is a type of the Church of Christ; and when so employed, it has the breast and belly of silver, and the back of gold, two wings being attached to the head, two to the shoulders, and two to the feet. The pyx or box for containing the Host (q. v.) in Roman Catholic churches is sometimes made in the form of a dove, and suspended over the altar, and the dove is often placed on the covers of fonts. In this position it may still be seen in parish churches in England" (Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.). See also Martigny, Dict. des Antiquités Chrétiennes (Paris, 1865, p. 164; Didron, Christian Iconography (Bohn), p. 451; Jehan, Dict. des Origines du Christianisme (Paris, 1856), art. Colombe.

DOVE-COT. Isaiah (lx, 8) clearly refers to such structures in describing the final restoration of Israel after their long exile: "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" (כַּיּוֹנִים אֶל־אֲרֻבֹּתֵיהֶם, like the doves to their lattices). They doubtless derived their Heb. name from their latticed or window-like form. See WINDOW. Morier illustrates this comparison from what he observed in Persia. "In the environs of the city, to the westward, near the Zainderood, are many pigeon-houses, erected at a distance from habitations, for the sole purpose of collecting pigeons' dung for manure. They are long round towers, rather broader at the bottom than the top, and crowned by conical spiracles, through which the pigeons descend. Their interior resembles a honey-comb, pierced with a thousand holes, each of which forms a snug retreat for a nest. More care appears to have been bestowed upon their outside than upon that of the generality of the dwelling-houses, for they are pointed and ornamented. The extraordinary flights of pigeons which I have seen alight upon one of these buildings afford, perhaps, a good illustration of that passage in Isa. lx, 8. Their great numbers, and the compactness of their mass, literally look like a cloud at a distance, and obscure the sun in their passage" (Second Journey through Persia, p. 140). Not only are these birds profitable as food, but both Porter and Morier assure us that their manure is used in Persia. According to the latter, "the dung of pigeons is the dearest manure that the Persians use; and as they apply it almost entirely for the rearing of melons, it is probably on that account that the melons of Ispahan are so much finer than those of other cities. The revenue of a pigeon-house is about a hundred tomauns per annum" (Second Journey, p. 141). Porter says "two hundred tomauns" (Travels, i, 451). See below.

DOVES' DUNG occurs in 2 Kings vi, 25, as a literal translation of חֲרִיֹנִים (charey'-yonim'), which in the margin is written חַרְיוֹנִים (dib-yonim'), both meaning the same thing. By many the expression is considered to signify literally the dung of pigeons as food in the last degree of human suffering by famine: "And there was a great famine in Samaria, and behold they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for threescore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of doves' dung for four pieces of silver." Different opinions, however, have been entertained respecting the meaning of the words which are the subject of this article, namely, whether they should be taken literally, or as a figurative name of some vegetable substance. The strongest point in favor of the former view is that all ancient Jewish writers have understood the term literally, and generally as an article of food. That this interpretation is not forced appears from similar passages in Josephus (War, v, 13, 7): "Some persons were driven to such terrible distress as to search the common sewers and old dunghills of cattle, and to eat the dung which they got there, and what they of old could not endure so much as to look upon they now used for food;" see also Eusebius (Eccles. Hist. iii, 6): "Indeed necessity forced them to apply their teeth to every thing; and, gathering what was no food even for the filthiest of irrational animals, they devoured it." Celsius, who is strongly in favor of the literal meaning, quotes the following passage from Bruson (Memorabil. ii, c. 41): "The Cretans, during the siege by Metellus, on account of the scarcity of wine and drinks, allayed their thirst with the urine of cattle;" and one much to the point from a Spanish writer, who states that in the year 1316 so great a famine distressed the English that "men ate their own children, dogs, mice, and pigeons' dung." As an additional argument in favor of the literal interpretation of the passage in question may be adduced the language of Rabshakeh to the Jews in the time of Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii, 27; Isa. xxxvi, 12). Other and more modern instances have been adduced, and among them the famine in England during the reign of king Edward II, A.D. 1316, when "pigeons' dung" is mentioned as being eaten by the poor (Edinburgh Christian Instructor, No. 122). It may be, however, that the sacred writer means only to say that the famine was so severe, and every thing so exorbitantly dear, that an instance occurred when an ass's head was sold for eighty pieces of silver, and a cab of doves' dung for five; so that the passage may be understood literally, since it is not incredible that persons oppressed by severe famine should devour even the excrements of animals. In the account of the famine and pestilence in Egypt, A.D. 1200, 1201, written in Arabic by the physician Abd-allatif, we have a remarkable illustration of this passage. He says, "The poor, already pressed by the famine which increased continually, were driven to devour dogs, and the carcasses of animals and men, yea, even the excrements of both." Taking the term, however, in a literal sense, various other explanations have been given of the use to which the doves' dung was applied. Some of the Rabbins were of opinion that it was used for fuel, and Josephus (Ant. ix, 4) that it was purchased for its salt. Mr. Harmer (Observ. iii, 185) has suggested that it might have been a valuable article, as being of great use for quickening the growth of esculent plants, particularly melons; and he shows, what is well known, that the Persians live much on melons in the summer months, and use pigeons' dung in raising them. All travellers describe the number of pigeon-houses in Persia. See above. Mr. Edwards, as cited by Dr. Harris, remarks that it is not likely they had much ground to cultivate in so populous a city for gardens; and is disposed therefore to understand it as meaning the offals or refuse of all sorts of grain, which was wont to be given to pigeons, etc. Dr. Harris, however, observes that the stress of the famine might have been so great as to have compelled the poor among the besieged in Samaria to devour either the intestines of the doves, after the more wealthy had eaten the bodies, or, as it might perhaps be rendered, the crops, with the undigested contents, as suggested by Fuller (Miscell. Sacr. vi, 2, p. 724). Bochart, indeed, has shown (Hieroz. ii, 573) that the term "pigeons' dung" was applied by the Arabs to different vegetable substances. He quotes Avicenna as applying the term stercus columbarum to two different plants or substances. One of these is described by Avicenna and other Arab authors under the names kuz-kundem and jong-kundem, as a light substance like moss. Secondly, this name was given to the ashnan or usnan, which appears to be a fleshy-leaved plant, that, like the salsolas, salicornias, or mesembryanthemums, when burnt, yields alkali in its ashes. From this Bochart has been led to consider it as identical with another plant, which occurs under the name of kali both in the Hebrew and Arabic languages, and which was used in ancient times, as at the present day, as an article of food. See PARCHED CORN. Celsius, however (Hierob. ii, 32), has shown that Bochart was mistaken in affirming that the article of food known among the Arabs by the epithet doves' or sparrows' dung was pulse or chick-peas, and therefore the connection between the Hebrew and Arabic terms kuli falls to the ground. Still it remains certain that the Arabs call the maritime plant kali, from the ashes of which soda (hence called al-kali) is obtained, by the epithet sparrows' dung. But this, if accessible at all in Samaria, would hardly be a regular article of food, even in a siege, much less be stored up for the purpose of sale, as the article in question appears to have been. We may also compare the German Teufelsdreck ("devil's dung") as expressive of the odor of asafœtida (see Gesenius, Thesaur. p. 516). Linnæus suggested (Prælectiones, ed. P. D. Giseke, p. 287) that the Heb. term may signify the Ornithogalum umbellatum, "Star of Bethlehem." On this subject the late Dr. Edward Smith remarks (English Botany, iv, 130, ed. 1814): "If Linnæus is right, we obtain a sort of clew to the derivation of ornithogalum (birds' milk), which has puzzled all the etymologists. May not this observation apply to the white fluid which always accompanies the dung of birds, and is their urine? One may almost perceive a similar combination of colors in the green and white of this flower, which accords precisely in this respect with the description which Dioscorides gives of his ornithogalum." Sprengel (Comment. on Dioscorides, ii, 173) is inclined to adopt the explanation of Linnæus. The late Lady Callcott, in her Scripture Herbal (1842, p. 130) infers that the pigeons' dung which has been mentioned above as being eaten in England in the famine of 1316 was the roots of this plant. It is a native of that country, and also of Taurus, Caucasus, and Northern Africa. Dioscorides states that its bulbs were sometimes cooked with bread, in the same way as the melanthium, and also that it was eaten both raw and roasted. The roots were also commonly eaten in Italy and other southern countries at an early period. If the besieged had communication with the exterior, or even if any of their body could have dug in the neighborhood of the walls, for the kind of "earth-nut" offered by the bulbs of the ornithogalum, or Star of Bethlehem, which is said to be abundant in the neighborhood of Samaria, there does not appear any good reason why it should not be the substance alluded to. But it does not seem so likely to have been stored up; and no distinct reference has been found in the Arab authors to such a plant under the name of stercus columbarum.

None of the above explanations of the difficult term in question appear satisfactory. Those that proceed upon the supposition that the substance designated was not intended as an article of food, give us only other purposes which are too petty to deserve such emphatic notice as marks of famine in a siege, and the rest fail to identify any substance with the terms employed. Nevertheless, having seen that the name "pigeons' dung" has been, and probably still is, applied by the Arabs to different vegetable substances, we are not disposed to adopt the literal meaning of the term, since doves' dung, being devoid of nutriment, was not likely to have served as food, even during the famine, especially as we find that an ass's head was sold for sixty pieces of silver. Now, if any asses remained for sale, or ass-loads of corn, as the expression has been interpreted, there is no reason for supposing that other substances may not have remained stored up in secret for those who had money to buy. But it is not easy to say what vegetable substance, serving as an article of diet, is alluded to by the name of "doves' dung." We must therefore rest, for the present, with the conclusion that it was a preparation from some plant, which, as being popularly known by this repulsive name, was not ordinarily resorted to for food, and of which, therefore, there has been no occasion elsewhere to make mention. Future naturalists may hereafter succeed in determining the point more definitely. Or it may be true that several species of plants and vegetable productions were anciently designated by this and similar terms, as the instances adduced above seem to show; and analogous cases in the popular nomenclature of modern nations go far to justify this assumption (see Thomson, Land and Book, ii, 200).

Dove, John, commonly called "the Hebrew tailor," on account of his trade, was distinguished as a Hutchinsonian. Dow, Daniel, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Ashford, Conn., Feb. 19, 1772. He graduated at Yale in 1793; entered the ministry May, 1795, and was installed pastor at Thompson, April 20, 1796, where he labored until his death, July 19, 1849. He was chosen fellow of Yale in 1824, and was made D.D. by Williams' College in 1840. Among his publications were Familiar Letters to Rev. John Sherman (1806):—The Pedo-Baptist Catechism (1807):—A Dissertation on the Sinaitic and Abrahamic Covenants (1811):—*Conn. Dow, John G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Gilmanton, N. H., June 15, 1785; entered the New England Conference in 1822; in 1833 was made presiding elder; in 1839 was agent of Newbury Seminary; was superannuated in 1857; and died at Chelsea, Mass., May 18, 1858, having preached thirty-six years. Mr. Dow was "an excellent man and minister, sound in doctrine, deep in experience, and uniform in piety. His preaching was full of thought, and in demonstration of the Spirit."—Minutes of Conferences, 1859, p. 141.

Dow, Lorenzo, an eccentric American preacher, was born in Coventry, Conn., Oct. 18, 1777. He began travelling and preaching in the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1798, and in 1799 he was appointed to Essex Circuit, but soon departed for Europe, under the impression that he had a special mission to Ireland. He was "dropped" by the Conference, and ever after continued to travel and preach independently, although still adhering to Methodist doctrines. He rode at the rate of forty to fifty miles a day, and preached often four or five times daily. In his sermons he particularly "argued against Atheism, Deism, Universalism, and Calvinism." His final efforts were directed against the Jesuits, whose influence he thought would be fatal to the country. He died suddenly at Washington, Feb. 2d, 1834. Dow figured considerably as a writer. Among his publications are, A short Account of a long Travel; with Beauties of Wesley (Phila. 1823, 8vo):—History of a Cosmopolite; or the Writings of the Rev. Lorenzo Dow, containing his Experience and Travels in Europe and America up to near his fiftieth Year; also his Polemic Writings" (often reprinted; latest, Cincinnati, 1851, 1855, 8vo):—The Stranger in Charleston; or the Trial and Confession of Lorenzo Dow (Phila. 1822, 8vo):—Polemical Works (N. Y. 1814, 12mo), etc. See Peck, Early Methodism (New York, 1860, 12mo, p. 198); Dealings of God, Man, and the Devil, containing Dow's Life and Miscellaneous Writings (N. Dragonnades, or Dragoonings, one of the modes of persecution employed against the Protestants of France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV; so called because the chief soldiers engaged in the service were dragoons. See FRANCE; PERSECUTIONS.

Dram (1 Chron. xxix, 7; Ezra ii, 69; viii, 27; Neh. vii, 70, 71), or Drachm (Tobit v, 14; 2 Macc. iv, 19; xii, 43). The term rendered thus in our version (Sept. δραχμή and χρυσοῦς, Vulg. drachma and solidus; דַּרְכְּמוֹנִים, darkemonim', Ezra ii, 69; Neh. vi, 70-72; or with a letter prefixed אַדַּרְכֳנִים, adarkonim', 1 Chron. xxix, 7; Ezra viii, 27) is usually thought to denote the DARIC (δαρεικός) of the Persians (from the Persic dara, a king, whence perhaps the title Darius), and seems to be etymologically connected with the Greek DRACHMA (δραχμή). The daric is of interest not only as the most ancient gold coin of which any specimens have been preserved to the present day, but as the earliest coined money which, we can be sure, was known to and used by the Jews; for, independently of the above passages, it must have been in circulation among the Jews during their subjection to the Persians. It even circulated extensively in Greece. The distinguishing mark of the coin was a crowned archer, kneeling on one knee, stamped on one side, and on the other a deep irregular cleft.

Gold Daric of Persia. Actual size.

Harpocration says that, according to some persons, the daric was worth twenty silver drachmæ, which agrees with the statement of Xenophon (Anab. i, 7, 18), who informs us that 3000 darics were equal to ten talents, which would consequently make the daric equal to twenty drachmæ. The value of the daric in our money, computed thus from the drachma, is 16*s.* 3*d.* sterling, or $3.93; but, if reckoned by comparison with our gold money, it is much more. The darics in the British Museum weigh 128·4 grains and 128·6 grains respectively. Hussey (Anc. Weights, vii, 3) calculates the daric as containing on an average about 123·7 grains of pure gold, and therefore equal to £1 1*s.* 10*d.* 1·76 gr., or $5.29. There are also silver coins which go by the name of darics, on account of their bearing the figure of an archer; but they were never called by this name in ancient times. See DARIC.

The drachma (δραχμή, "piece of silver," Luke xv, 8, 9) was a coin of silver, the most common among the Greeks, and which, after the Exile, became also current among the Jews (2 Macc. iv, 19; x, 20; xii, 43). The earlier Attic drachmæ were of the average weight of 66·5 grains, and in a comparison with the shilling would be equal to 9·72*d.*, or about 19 cents. After Alexander's time there was a slight decrease in the weight of the drachma, till, in course of time, it weighed only 63 grains, and specimens of the later times are in some cases even of less weight than this. In this state the drachma was counted equal to the denarius, which was at first worth 8½*d.*, and afterwards only 7½*d.*, or about 15 cents, which may therefore be considered as the value of the drachma in the New Testament—that is, the nominal value, for the real value of money was far greater in the time of Christ than at present. That the drachma of Alexandria was equal to two of Greece is inferred from the fact that the Sept. makes the Jewish shekel equivalent to two drachmæ [see DIDRACHMA]; and, in fact, an Alexandrian drachma weighing 126 grains has been found. There was also the tetradrachm, or four-drachmæ piece, in later times called the stater (q. v.). (See Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Drachma.) See DRACHMA.

Athenian Drachma. Actual size.

Draught occurs in our version as a translation of ἀφεδρών (literally a place of sitting apart), a sink or privy (Matt. xv, 17; Mark vii, 19).

DRAUGHT-HOUSE similarly occurs as a translation of מָחְרָאָה (macharaah', literally an easing one's self, 2 Kings x, 27 for which in the margin, by euphemism, מוֹצָאָה, motsaah', an outgoing), a privy or sewer. Jehu, in order to show his contempt for the worship of Baal, ordered his temple to be destroyed, and the place converted to a vile use, that of receiving offal or ordure. On this mode of degradation, comp. Ezra vi, 11; Dan. ii, 5.

Drawer OF WATER (שֹׁאֵב מָיִם, shoeb' ma'yim; Sept. ὑδροφόρος, i. e. water-carrier) occurs in Deut. xxix, 11; Josh. ix, 21, 23; and in both instances it is spoken of as a hard and servile employment: to it the crafty Gibeonites were condemned. In the East water must be fetched from the river or the wells. In towns this is rarely done by the householders themselves, or by their servants. There are persons who make a trade of it to supply every day, to regular customers, the quantity required. They carry about the water in a well-prepared goat-skin, which is slung to the back; the neck is usually brought under the arm and compressed by the hand, serving as the mouth of this curious but very useful vessel. Those who drive a great trade have an ass, which carries two skins at once, borne like panniers. These men, continually passing to and fro with their wet bags through the narrow streets, are great nuisances in the towns from per of fine linen (Sept. σινδών), which might be used in various ways, but especially as a night-shirt (Mark xiv, 51; comp. Herod. ii, 95; Schleusner's Lex. in N. T. s. v.). (The Hebrew term is given in the Syriac N. T. as =σουδάριον, Luke xix, 20, and λέντιον, John xiii, 4.) The material or robe is mentioned in Judg. xiv, 12, 13 ("sheet," "shirt"), Prov. xxxi, 24, and Isa. iii, 23 ("fine linen"); but in none of these passages is there anything to decide its specific meaning. The Talmudical writers occasionally describe the tallith under that name, as being made of fine linen: hence Lightfoot (Exercitations on Mark xiv, 51) identifies the σινδών worn by the young man as a tallith, which he had put on in his haste without his other garments.

(3.) The meil' (מְעִיל) was an upper or second tunic, the difference being that it was longer than the first. It is hence termed in the Sept. ὑποδύτης ποδήρης, and probably in this sense the term is applied to the kethoneth passim (2 Sam. xiii, 18), implying that it reached down to the feet. The sacerdotal meil is elsewhere described. See PRIEST. As an article of ordinary dress it was worn by kings (1 Sam. xxiv, 4), prophets (1 Sam. xxviii, 14), nobles (Job i, 20), and youths (1 Sam. ii, 19). It may, however, be doubted whether the termed is used in its specific sense in these passages, and not rather in its broad etymological sense (from עָטָל, to cover), for any robe that chanced to be worn over the kethoneth. In the Sept. the renderings vary between ἐπενδύτης (1 Sam. xviii, 4; 2 Sam. xiii, 18; 1 Sam. ii, 19, Theodot.), a term properly applied to an upper garment, and specially used in John xxi, 7, for the linen coat worn by the Phœnician and Syrian fishermen (Theophyl. in l. c.), διπλοΐς (1 Sam. ii, 19; xv, 27; xxiv, 4, 11; xxviii, 14; Job xxix, 14), ἱμάτια (Job i, 20), στόλη (1 Chron. xv, 27; Job ii, 12), and ὑποδύτης (Exod. xxxix, 21; Lev. viii, 7), showing that, generally speaking, it was regarded as an upper garment. This further appears from the passages in which notice of it occurs: in 1 Sam. xviii, 4, it is the "robe" which Jonathan first takes off; in 1 Sam. xviii, 14, it is the "mantle" in which Samuel is enveloped; in 1 Sam. xv, 27, it is the "mantle," the skirt of which is rent (comp. 1 Kings xi, 30, where the שַׂלְמָה, samlah', is similarly treated); in 1 Sam. xxiv, 4, it is the "robe" under which Saul slept (generally the בֶּגֶד, be'ged, was so used); and in Job i, 20; ii, 12, it is the "mantle" which he rends (comp. Ezra ix, 3, 5): in these passages it evidently describes an outer robe, whether the simlah, or the meil itself used as a simlah. Where two tunics are mentioned (Luke iii, 11) as being worn at the same time, the second would be a meil; travellers generally wore two (Joseph. Ant. xvii, 5, 7), but the practice was forbidden to the disciples (Matt. x, 10; Luke ix, 3).

The dress of the middle and upper classes in modern Egypt (fig. 3) illustrates the customs of the Hebrews. In addition to the shirt, they wear a long vest of striped silk and cotton, called kaftan, descending to the ankles, and with ample sleeves, so that the hands may be concealed at pleasure. The girdle surrounds this vest. The outer robe consists of a long cloth coat, called gibbeh, with sleeves reaching nearly to the wrist. In cold weather the abba is thrown over the shoulders.

Fig. 3. An Egyptian of the upper Classes.

(4.) The ordinary outer garment consisted of a quadrangular piece of woollen cloth, probably resembling in shape a Scotch plaid. The size and texture would vary with the means of the wearer. The Hebrew terms referring to it are —simlah' (שַׂלְמָה, occasionally שַׂלְמָת), which appears to have had the broadest sense, and sometimes is put for clothes generally (Gen. xxxv, 2; xxxvii, 34; Exod. iii, 22; xxii, 9; Deut. x, 18; Isa. iii, 7; iv, 1), though once used specifically of the warrior's cloak (Isa. ix, 5); be'ged (בֶּגֶד), which is more usual in speaking of robes of a handsome and substantial character (Gen. xxvii, 15; xli, 42; Exod. xxviii, 2; 1 Kings xxii, 10; 2 Chron. xviii, 9; Isa. lxiii, 1); kesuth' (כְּסוּת), appropriate to passages where covering or protection is the prominent idea (Exod. xxii, 26; Job xxvi, 6; xxxi, 19); and, lastly, lebush' (לְבוּשׁ), usual in poetry, but specially applied to a warrior's cloak (2 Sam. xx, 8), priests' vestments (2 Kings x, 22), and royal apparel (Esth. vi, 11; viii, 15). A cognate term, malbush' (מַלְבּוּשׁ) describes specifically a state dress, whether as used in a royal household (1 Kings x, 5; 2 Chron. ix, 4) or for religious festivals (2 Kings x, 22): elsewhere it is used generally for robes of a handsome character (Job xxvii, 16; Isa. lxiii, 3; Ezek. xvi, 13; Zeph. i, 8). Another term, mad (מַד), with its derivatives מִדָּה, Psa. cxxxiii, 2, and מִדְוֶ, 2 Sam. x, 4; 1 Chron. xix, 4), is expressive of the length of the Hebrew garments (1 Sam. iv, 12; xviii, 4), and is specifically applied to a long cloak (Judg. iii, 16; 2 Sam. xx, 8), and to the priest's coat (Lev. vi, 10). The Greek terms ἱμάτιον and στόλη express the corresponding idea, the latter being specially appropriate to robes of more than ordinary grandeur (1 Macc. x, 21; xiv, 9; Mark xii, 38; xvi, 5; Luke xv, 22; xx, 46; Rev. vi, 11; vii, 9, 13); the χιτών and ἱμάτιον (A. V. "coat," "cloak," Vulg. tunica, pallium) are brought into juxtaposition in Matt. v, 40, and Acts ix, 39. The beged might be worn in various ways, either wrapped round the body, or worn over the shoulders, like a shawl, with the ends or "skirts" (כְּנָפַיִם; Sept. πτερύγια; Vulg. anguli) hanging down in front; or it might be thrown over the head so as to conceal the face (2 Sam. xv, 30; Esth. vi, 12). The ends were skirted with a fringe, and bound with a dark purple ribbon (Num. xv, 38): it was confined at the waist by a girdle, and the fold (חֵיק; Sept. κόλπος; Vulg. sinus) formed by the overlapping of the robe served as a pocket in which a considerable quantity of articles might be carried (2 Kings iv, 39; Psa. lxxix, 12; Hag. ii, 12; Niebuhr, Description, p. 56), or as a purse (Prov. xvii, 23; xxi, 14; Isa. lxv, 6, 7; Jer. xxxii, 18; Luke vi, 38).

The ordinary mode of wearing the outer robe, called abba or abáyeh, at the present time, is exhibited in figs. 2 and 5. The arms, when falling down, are completely covered by it, as in fig. 5; but in holding any weapon, or in active work, the lower part of the arm is exposed, as in fig. 2.

Figs. 4, 5. Egyptians of the lower Orders.

b. The dress of the women differed from that of the men in regard to the outer garment, the kethoneth being worn equally by both sexes (Cant. v, 3). The names of their distinctive robes were as follows: (1) mitpach'ath (מִטְפַּחַת; Sept. περίζωμα; Vulg. palŭum, linteamen; A. V. "veil," "wimple"), a kind of shawl (Ruth iii, 15; Isa. iii, 22); (2) maataphah' (מַעֲטָפָה; Vulg. pallium; A. V. "mantle"), another kind of shawl (Isa. iii, 22), but how differing from the one just mentioned we know not: the etymological meaning of the first name is expansion, of the second enveloping; (3) tsa'iph (צָעִיף; θέριστρον; "veil"), a robe worn by Rebekah on approaching Isaac (Gen. xxiv, 65), and by Tamar when she assumed the guise of a harlot (Gen. xxxviii, 14, 19)—it was probably, as the Sept. represents it, a light summer dress of handsome appearance (περιέβαλε τὸ θέριστρον καὶ ἐκαλλωπίσατο, Gen. xxxviii, 14), and of ample dimensions, so that it might be thrown over the head at pleasure; (4) radid' (רָדִיד; "veil"), a similar robe (Isa. iii, 23; Cant. v, 7), and substituted for the tsaiph in the Chaldee version—we may conceive of these robes or shawls as resembling the peplum of the Greeks, which might be worn over the head (as represented in Smith's Dict. of Ant. p. 753), or again as resembling the habarah and milayeh of the modern Egyptians (Lane, i, 73, 75); (5) pethigil' (פְּתִיגִיל; χιτὼν μεσοπόρφυρος; "stomacher"), a term of doubtful origin, but probably significant of a gay holiday dress (Isa. iii, 24)—to the various explanations enumerated by Gesenius (Thesaur. p. 1137), we may add one proposed by Saalchütz (Archæol. i, 31), פֶּתִי, wide or foolish, and גִּיל, pleasure, in which case it = unbridled pleasure, and has no reference to dress at all; (6) gilyonim' (גִּלְיֹנִים, Isa. iii, 23), also a doubtful word, explained in the Sept. as a transparent dress, i. e. of gauze (ἐπάρατνῆ Λακωνικῇ)—Schroeder (De Vest. mul. Heb. p. 511) supports this view, but perhaps the word means, as in the A. V., "glasses." The garments of females were terminated by an ample border or fringe (שׁוּלַי, שׁוּל; ὀπίσθια; skirts), which concealed the feet (Isa. xlvii, 2; Jer. xiii, 22).

Figs. 6 and 7 illustrate some of the peculiarities of female dress: the former is an Egyptian woman (in her walking dress); the latter represents a dress, probably of great antiquity, still worn by the peasants in the south of Europe: the outer robe, or hulaliyeh, is a large piece of woollen stuff wound round the body, the upper parts being attached at the shoulders; another piece of the same stuff is used for the head-veil, or tarhah.

c. Having now completed our description of Hebrew dress, we add a few remarks relative to the selection of equivalent terms in our own language. It must at once strike every Biblical student as a great defect in our Auth. Vers. that the same English word should represent various Hebrew words; e. g. that "veil" should be promiscuously used for radid (Isa. iii, 23), tsaiph (Gen. xxiv, 65), mitpachath (Ruth iii, 15), mosveh (Exod. xxxiv, 33); "robe" for meil (1 Sam. xviii, 4), kethoneth (Isa. xxii, 21), addereth (Jon. iii, 6), salmah (Mic. ii, 8); "mantle" for meil (1 Sam. xv, 27), addereth (1 Kings xix, 13), maataphah (Isa. iii, 22); and "coat" for meil (1 Sam. ii, 19), kithoneth (Gen. iii, 21); and conversely that different English words should be promiscuously used for the same Hebrew one, as meil is translated "coat," "robe," "mantle;" addereth "robe," "mantle." Uniformity would be desirable, in as far as it can be attained, so that the English reader might understand that the same Hebrew term occurred in the original text where the same English term was found in the translation. Beyond uniformity, correctness of translation would also be desirable: the difficulty of attaining this in the subject of dress, with regard to which the customs and associations are so widely at variance in our own country and in the East, is very great. Take, for instance, the kethoneth: at once an under garment, and yet not unfrequently worn without anything over it—a shirt, as being worn next the skin, and a coat, as being the upper garment worn in a house: deprive the Hebrew of his kethoneth, and he was positively naked; deprive the Englishman of his coat, and he has under garments still. So again with the beged: in shape probably like a Scotch plaid, but the use of such a term would be unintelligible to most English readers; in use unlike any garment with which we are familiar, for we only wear a great-coat or a cloak in bad weather, whereas the Hebrew and his beged were inseparable. With such difficulties attending the subject, any attempt to render the Hebrew terms must be, more or less, a compromise between correctness and modern usage, and the English terms which we are about to propose must be regarded merely in the light of suggestions. Kethoneth answers in many respects to "frock;" the sailor's "frock" is constantly worn next the skin, and ticed in the Mishna (Shabb. xx, 2; Terum. xi, 1) under a Hebraized form of that name, consisting of a mixture of wine, honey, and pepper; the other a decoction of the juice of the grape, termed debush (honey) by the Hebrews, and dibs by the modern Syrians, resembling the ἕψημα of the Greeks and the defrutum of the Romans, and similarly used, being mixed either with wine, milk, or water. 4. Date-wine, which was also manufactured in Egypt (οἶνος φοινικίτης, Herod. ii, 86; iii, 20). It was made by mashing the fruit in water in certain proportions (Plin. xiv, 19, 3). A similar method is still used in Arabia, except that the fruit is not mashed (Burckhardt's Arabia, ii, 264): the palm wine of modern Egypt is the sap of the tree itself, obtained by making an incision into its heart (Wilkinson, ii, 174). 5. Various other fruits and vegetables are enumerated by Pliny (xiv, 19) as supplying materials for factitious or home-made wine, such as figs, millet, the carob fruit, etc. It is not improbable that the Hebrews applied raisins to this purpose in the simple manner followed by the Arabians (Burckhardt, ii, 377), viz., by putting them in jars of water and burying them in the ground until fermentation takes place. —Smith, s. v. See WINE.

DRINK-OFFERING (נֶסֶךְ, ne'sek, or נְסִיךְ, nasik'; σπονδή, compare σπένδεσθαι, Phil. ii, 17). One form of this consisted, according to the ritual law, of wine (Num. xv, 5; Hos. ix, 4; Sirach i, 15 [17]; compare Curt. vii, 8, 18; Pliny, xiv, 14; Iliad, i, 463; x, 579; Odys. xii, 362; on the best sorts of wine for this purpose, see the Mishna, Menach. viii, 6 sq.), which, according to Josephus (Ant. iii, 9, 4), was poured around the altar (περὶ τὸν βωμόν, i. e. the burnt altar, Exod. xxx, 9), and not, as the Jews understand it (Mishna, Succah, iv, 9), in a channel or tube of it. Drink-offerings were commonly joined with meat-offerings (Num. vi, 15, 17; 2 Kings xvi, 13; Joel i, 9, 13; ii, 14), an addition to the burnt and thank offerings (not the sin and trespass offering), which consisted of quadrupeds (Num. vi, 17; xv, 5, 10; 1 Chron. xxix, 21; 2 Chron. xxix, 35), and were, like these, presented, sometimes by private persons and sometimes in the name of the people, daily (Exod. xxix, 40; Num. xxviii, 7), on the Sabbath (Num. xxviii, 9), and on feast-days (Num. xxviii, 14; xxix, 6, 16, 24), in such proportion that one lamb was reckoned to require one fourth of a hin of wine, one ram a third of a hin, and one bullock a half hin (Num. xv, 5 sq.; xxviii, 7, 14). In the (second) Temple liquors were kept ready for drink-offerings (Joseph. War, x, 13, 6), and were dispensed (Mishna, Shekal. v, 1, 3 and 4) by the præfect of libations (עַל הַנְּסָכִים). The Israelites frequently devoted drink-offerings also to foreign deities (Isa. lvii, 6; lxv, 11; Jer. vii, 18; xix, 13; xliv, 17; Ezek. xx, 28), as throughout antiquity libations of wine were made to heathen gods (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Sacrificium, p. 846). On the water-libation at the festival of booths, see TABERNACLES, FEAST OF. Libations of water occur in individual cases even prior to the exile (2 Sam. xxiii, 16; 1 Sam. vii, 6). On the other hand, Elijah poured water on the altar (1 Kings xviii, 34 sq.) merely to heighten the effect of his miracle in contrast with his idolatrous competitors (Josephus, Ant. viii, 13, 5). On the oil-libation of Gen. xxxv, 14, see STONE. Psalm xvi, 6 (but probably not Zech. ix, 7) appears to contain an allusion to heathenish drink-offerings consisting of wine mingled with blood (vinum assiratum), which, especially when persons bound themselves to a fearful undertaking, it was customary to drink (Sallust, Catil. xxii, 1; Sil. Ital. ii, 426 sq.).—Winer, ii, 629. See OFFERING.

Dromedary stands in the A. V. for the following Heb. words: בִּכְרָה, bikrah', Jer. ii, 23 (Sept. mistranslates ὀψέ, as if reading בְּקֶרֶה; Vulg. cursor levis), a young camel (see Bochart, Hieroz. i, 82 sq.; Gesenius, Thesaur. p. 206); רֶכֶשׁ, re'kesh, 1 Kings iv, 28 (Sept. ἅρμα; Vulg. jumentum; A. V. "mule" in Esth. viii, 10, 14; "swift beast" in Mic. i, 13), a steed or fleet courser (see Bochart, Hieroz. i, 95); רַמָּךְ, rammak', Esth. viii, 10 (Sept. and Vulg. altogether paraphrase), a mare (fully בְּנֵי הָרַמָּכִים הָאֲחַשְׁתְּרָנִים, ha-achasteranim beney ha-rammakim, the mules, sons of mares, A. V. "young dromedaries"). See HORSE; MULE. The dromedary is properly the African or Arabian species of camel (Camelus dromedarius), having only one hump (Wellsted, i, 204), in distinction from the Bactrian (Aristotle, Anim. ii, 2; Pliny, viii, 26; Apulej. Asia. vii, p. 152, Bip.), which has two (דַּבֶּשֶׁת, Isa. xxx, 6). It is thus the kind usually spoken of in Scripture (Heb. גָּמָל, gamal') and in the East (Arabic jaml), where it is a widely-found and exceedingly useful animal. It has a slender bodily frame, long neck, small head and ears, and is of a gray or brown (very seldom black) color of skin, and usually 6½ feet high. (The Talmud, Shabbath, v, 1, speaks of a peculiar variety, נאקה, which the Gemara interprets to mean the white camel.) The double-humped (called also Turkish) camel is the largest and strongest (being capable of carrying from 800 to 1500 pounds), but is so much affected by the heat of the sun as to be unserviceable during the summer months. The one-humped camel, or proper dromedary, which is everywhere met with in Syria and Palestine (Seetzen, xviii, 448), is the one referred to in Isa. lxvi, 20 (see Gesenius, Comment. in loc.) by the term כִּרְכָּרוֹת, kirkaroth' (the versions all vague or wrong: Sept. σκιάδια, Vulg. carracæ, A. V. "swift beasts"), so called from their bounding motion (Bochart, Hieroz. i, 90), which is very rapid (Burckhardt, Bedouins, ii, 76), and is sometimes accelerated by musical instruments (Sadi Gulist. p. 190). Its greater speed is in consequence of a finer and more elegant structure (Russel, Aleppo, ii, 44; Prosp. Alp. Rer. Æg. iv, 7, p. 223 sq.; Sonnini, Trav. i, 369), so that it can not only make more miles per hour (Shaw, Trav. p. 149), but maintain this pace for a great number of days together (Pococke, East, i, 309; Volney, ii, 260; Höst, Nachr. v. Marokko, p. 289). They carry only 500 to 700 pounds. A dromedary is properly a camel, distinguished from the common one only by its breed and training, as a saddle-horse is distinguished from a cart-horse. This breed is called swift with respect to other camels, not with respect to other animals; for the camel is not eminently a swift animal, and those most renowned for their fleetness are not in any way comparable to the horse. The best-trained camels cannot sustain a gallop above half an hour, in which, at forced speed, they may make about eight or nine miles. This is their highest exertion. A forced trot is not so contrary to the camel's nature, and it will support it for several hours without evincing any symptoms of fatigue; but even here the utmost degree of celerity of the very best-bred dromedary does not exceed about twelve miles an hour; and it is therefore in this pace also less expeditious than a moderately good horse (Kitto, Pict. Bible, note on Jer. ii, 23). "It is not therefore," says Burckhardt, to whom we owe this statement, "by extreme celerity that the hejeins and delouls are distinguished, however surprising may be the stories related on this subject both in Europe and the East; but they are perhaps unequalled by any quadrupeds for the ease with which they carry their rider through an uninterrupted journey of several days and nights, when they are allowed to persevere in their own favorite pace, which is a kind of easy amble, at the rate of about five miles or five miles and a half in the hour" (Notes on the Bedouins, p. 262). In proportion to its weight, the camel takes but little nourishment (Philostr. Apol. i. 41): it eats in twenty-four hours a single meal of barley or beans (husks, Mishna, Shabb. vii, 4; comp. Minutoli, Nachtr. p. 259; see Wellsted, i, 206); also dough or cakes; and in the want of all these, grass and thistles, about a pound's weight; it drinks slowly (Cotovic. Itiner. iii, 21), after it has made the water muddy with its feet, and can go even 16 (some say 20) days without drinking (Aristotle, Anim. viii, 10, and Pliny, viii, 26, give only four days; but this probably means its ordinary intervals between drinking times: see Russel, Aleppo, ii, 34); although the herbs wet with dew in the desert constantly supply moisture; besides, the camel's double cell-formed stomach apparently serves as a receptacle of water, from which it moistens its usually dry fodder, and by means of rumination can even assuage its thirst. Travellers suffering from want of water in the desert not unfrequently slaughter a camel, and allay their thirst with the water from its stomach, which is clear and pure. (On the diseases of the camel, see Browne, Trav. p. 365.) Camels were in use as early as the patriarchal ages (Gen. xii, 16; xxiv, 10 sq.; xxx, 43; xxxi, 17; xxxii, 7; compare Job i, 3; xlii, 12; see Aristotle, Anim. ix, 10), and in later times these animals were a very valuable possession to the Israelites (1 Chron. xxxvii, 30; Tob. x, 11; Ezra ii, 67; comp. Harmer, iii, 355); although they appear to have been less precious than with the neighboring Arabic tribes (Judg. vi, 5; vii, 12; 1 Sam. xv, 3; xxvii, 9; Gen. xxxvii, 25; Jer. xlix, 32; comp. Mishna, Shabb. xxiv, 3; see

Saddling a Deloul, or Dromedary.

Leo Afric. Descr. Afr. ix, p. 145; Descr. de l'Egypte, xvi, 186). They were generally used, however (especially in the caravans of the desert), for transportation of wares and baggage (Gen. xxxvii, 25; Judg. vi, 5; 1 Chron. xii, 40; 1 Kings x, 2; 2 Chron. xiv, 14; 2 Kings viii, 9; Isa. xxx, 7; lx, 6; comp. Josephus, Life, 24; Curt. v, 6, 9), since they carry a large load (Volney, ii, 311; Lorent, Wand. p. 120; Russel, ii, 34; see Diod. Sic. ii, 54), and are more sure-footed in hilly regions than the ass (Wellsted, i, 205; ii, 68). They were also used for riding (Gen. xxiv, 64; 1 Sam. xxx, 17; comp. Troilo, Trav. p. 455; Niebuhr, Trav. i, 215), and women, seldom males, generally sat in a kind of basket or sedan-chair (כַּר, see Gesenius, Thes. p. 715), which was fastened on the back of the camel (Gen. xxxi, 34), being spacious, and covered on all sides (see Kämpfer, Amoen. p. 147; Pococke, East, 1, pl. 58). On account of its long but slow stride, and its light gait (Tischendorf, Reis. i, 258), the beast has a regular rocking motion, not disagreeable in itself to the rider, but so uniform as at length to become wearisome (Lorent, Wander. p. 119). Cyrus trained camels to fight (in order to make the horses of the enemy turn, Herod. i, 80; Ælian, Anim. iii, 7; comp. Pliny, viii, 26; Polyæn. vii, 6, 6), and had even a camel troop (camels ridden by horsemen, Isa. xxi, 7; comp. Xenoph. Cyrop. vi, 2, 8; vii, 1, 27, 48 sq.; Herod. vii, 86; on the military use of camels among other people, see Diod. Sic. ii, 54; iii, 45; Livy, xxxvii, 40; Appian, Syr. 32; Pollux, Onom. x, 8; Herodian, iv. 15, 4; Veget. iii, 23; comp. Gesen. Comment. z. Jes. i, 661; and Judg. vii, 12). Bonaparte, when commanding the French army in Egypt, formed a military corps mounted on dromedaries. In loading or mounting the camel, it is made, on a given signal, to fall on the knees and breast (חִבְרִיחַ; comp. Arnob. Adv. gent. ii, 25), and receive the burden, which hangs over the back on both sides; and when it is too heavy the animal utters a mournful cry (Pliny, viii, 26; compare Schweigger, Reise, p. 264; Höst, Marokko, p. 288; Cotovic. Itiner. p. 404). camel receiving its load is found, designed with considerable truth and spirit: the legs bent under, the tail raised, the foot of the man on the neck of the animal to keep it from rising, while a second adjusts the burden from behind, form a group seen every day in the Desert and in an Eastern town (Layard, Nin. and Bab. p. 495). They are often stubborn and vicious, although generally tractable, except in the time of bricks. In the remains of Egyptian edifices, the straw still preserves its original color, and is a clear proof that they were never burnt in stacks or kilns. Dr. Richardson found near the ruins of Tentyra huts built of sun-dried brick made of straw and clay. See DWELLING.

God, it is said, "dwells in light," in respect to his independent possession of his own glorious attributes (1 Tim. vi, 16; 1 John i, 7). He dwells in heaven in respect to his more immediate presence there (Psa. cxxiii, 1). He dwells in his Church in the continued bestowal of his ordinances, and of his gracious supporting and comforting influences (Psa. ix, 11; 1 John iv, 12). Christ dwelt among men in his state of humiliation on earth (John i, 14). He dwells in our hearts by faith, he is united to us as our head; his righteousness is imputed to us, and applied to our consciences; his spirit and grace are fixed in our hearts; he loves and delights in us (Ephes. iii, 17–19). The Holy Spirit dwells in us, and sheds abroad his gracious influence (Rom. viii and ix; 1 Cor. iii, 16; 2 Tim. i, 14). The Word of God dwells in us richly, when it is carefully studied, firmly believed, and diligently practised (Psa. cxix, 11; Col. iii, 16). Wickedness, vengeance, or judgment is said to dwell in or upon a person or land when it long continues there (Job xi, 14; xviii, 15; Isa. xxxii, 16). See Wemyss, Symbol. Dict. s. v.

DWELL DEEP (הַעֲמִיקוּ לָשֶׁבֶת, heëmí'ku la-she'beth, make deep for dwelling; Sept. βαθύνατε ἑαυτοῖς εἰς κάθισιν, Vulg. descendite in voraginem), a phrase that occurs in Jer. xlix, 8, and seems to refer to the custom still common in the East of seeking retreat from danger in the recesses of rocks and caverns. When the wandering Arabs have drawn upon themselves the resentment of the more fixed inhabitants of those countries, and think themselves unable to stand against them, they withdraw into the depths of the great wilderness, where none can follow them. "Always on their guard against tyranny," says M. Savary, "on the least discontent that is given them, they pack up their tents, load their camels, ravage the flat country, and, loaded with plunder, plunge into the burning sands, whither none can pursue them, and where they alone can dwell." See ARABIA.

Dwelling (אֹהֶל, זְבוּל, מָגוּר, מוֹשָׁב, מִכוֹן, מָעוֹז, מִשְׁכָּן, מָעוֹן, etc.; κατοίκησις, etc.). The dwelling-houses of Palestine (see generally Harmer, i, 152 sq.; Faber, Archæol. i, 365; on Egyptian architecture, Rosellini, Monum. civ. ii, 378 sq.) were usually (Harmer, i, 165) built of burnt or merely dried bricks, לְבֵנִים, (Niebuhr, Trav. ii, 287; Pococke, East, ii, 173; Tavernier, Trav. i, 167, 287; Robinson, Rex. ii, 631–637; iii, 514, 589), and therefore very perishable (Matt. vii, 25; comp. Ezek. xii, 5, 7; xiii, 13 sq.; Tavernier, i, 287; Wellsted, i, 280); but frequently of stone (Lev. xiv, 40, 42; comp. Robinson's Res. iii, 316, 420, 496, 720), and palaces of squared stone (1 Kings vii, 9; Isa. ix, 9; Josephus, Ant. viii, 5, 2; compare Robinson, i, 354), or even of marble (שֵׁשׁ, שַׁיִשׁ, comp. 1 Chron. xxix, 2; Josephus, Ant. xv, 11, 3; War, v, 4, 4; of different building-stone, see the Mishna, Baba bathra, i, 1; the laying the foundation was an occasion of ceremony and festival, Zech. iv, 7; compare Ezra iii, 10; Job xxxviii, 7). These were held together by a cement (mortar, טִיט, Jer. xliii, 9; see Rosenmüller in loc.) of lime (סִיד, Isa. xxvii, 9) or plaster of Paris (gypsum, שַׂיד, Isa. xxxiii, 12; comp. Deut. xxvii, 4; Theoph. Lapid. 68 sq.), perhaps also bitumen (asphaltum, חֵמָר, compare Gen. xi, 3; Faber, i, 393 sq.). The exterior (and probably also the interior over the plaster) was usually whitewashed (חֶפֶל, κονία, Lev. xiv, 41 sq.; Ezek. xiii, 10 sq.; Dan. v, 5; Matt. xxiii, 27; Sirach, xxii, 17), bright wall-colors being used for royal residences (Jer. xxii, 14). The beams (2 Chron. xxxiv, 11; on בְּקָרִים, Hab. ii, 11, see Gesen. Thesaur. p. 705, and Delitzsch in loc.) were of sycomore (Isa. ix, 9), sometimes of olive-wood, sandal, or cedar (1 Kings vii, 2 sq.; Isa. ix, 9; Jer. xxii, 14). Elegant mansions were adorned externally with columns (of marble, Cant. v, 15; 1 Kings vii, 15 sq.; 2 Kings xxv, 13; Faber, Archæol. i, 414 sq.), and often whole porticoes (אוּלָם, στοά, 1 Kings vii, 6; comp. Josephus, War, iv, 4). See TEMPLE. The houses of the gentry (Niebuhr, Trav. ii, 293; Shaw, Trav. p. 182 sq.) were of several stories (1 Kings vii, 2 sq.; comp. Acts xx, 9; but see Korte, Suppl. p. 177), generally built in a quadrangle (comp. Kämpfer, Amoen. p. 194; Burckhardt, Trav. i, 120), and enclosing (Luke v, 19) a spacious court-yard (חָצֵר, 2 Sam. xvii, 18; Neh. viii, 16; comp. Esth. i, 5; v, 1; the impluvium or αὐλή, Matt. xxvi, 69; see Harmer, i, 177), which, surrounded by colonnades and galleries (Shaw, p. 353), paved (Harmer, i, 175), and containing fountains (2 Sam. vii, 18; comp. Joseph. Ant. xii, 4, 11; Harmer, i, 175), baths (2 Sam. xi, 2), and trees (Harmer, i, 175), formed the guest-chamber or drawing-room for the reception of visitors (Shaw, Trav. p. 183; Faber, i, 401; Harmer, i, 174; comp. Esth. i, 5 sq.), being often screened from the sun's rays by an awning (Rosenmüller, Morg. iii, 297). The flat roof, covered on the top with tiles, earth, or stone, and surrounded by a low parapet, was used sometimes for household or religious purposes, at others as a place of meeting or recreation. See ROOF. In connection with it (2 Kings xxiii, 12) was an upper room (עֲלִיָּה, ὑπερῷον), which was used (comp. Niebuhr, Trav. i, 380, 400; Shaw, p. 188 sq.) as a private chamber (2 Sam. xviii, 33; Dan. vi, 11; Judith viii, 5); also as a spare bedroom (2 Kings xxiii, 12; Tobit iii, 12; Acts i, 13; xx, 8), a sleeping apartment especially for guests (2 Kings iv, 10), and as a sick-chamber (1 Kings xvii, 19; Joseph. Ant. xviii, 8, 2), or room for laying out a corpse (Acts ix, 37, 39), but in summer resorted to for fresh air (Judg. iii, 20); and was often furnished with two modes of exit, one leading within the house, the other by a staircase directly to the street. Larger residences had an additional front court (חָצֵר, προαύλιον, πρόδυρον, πυλών, αὐλή; Jer. xxxii, 2; Mark xiv, 88; Luke xvi, 20; John xviii, 16; Acts x, 17, etc.), which served as an anteroom (so the Rabbins understand מְתָרִין, Judg. iii, 23; see Faber, p. 440), and from which, by means of stairs (מַדְרֵגָה, 2 Chron. ix, 11; a winding staircase, לוּל, 1 Kings vi, 8), often finished with costly wood (2 Chron. ix, 11), persons passed to the roof or upper story. A door led from the fore-court to the inner court, and from the latter was the entrance to the rooms on the ground floor of the house proper. These last were variously decorated with wainscoting (1 Kings vii, 7; Jer. xxii, 14; Hag. i, 4), ivory (1 Kings xxii, 39; Am. iii, 15; compare Psa. xlv, 9; Homer, Odyss. iv, 72 sq.; Horace, Od. ii, 18, 1 sq.; Pliny, xxxvi, 5; Harmer, i, 168 sq.; ii, 171 sq.; Faber, p. 399 sq.; also with precious metals inlaid or plated, Tibull. iii, 3, 16; Horace, Od. ii, 18, 1 sq.; Cicero, Parad. vi, 3; comp. 1 Cor. iii, 12), and carving (Josephus, Ant. viii, 5, 2; comp. Tavern. i, 168), since the splendor of Oriental houses was lavished rather upon the interior than the exterior (Pococke, East. i, 49); the floor was laid sometimes with a coating of gypsum, at others with tesselated blocks of variegated marble (Tibull. iii, 3, 16; Cicero, Parad. vi, 3) or other kinds of stone (Harmer, i, 172 sq.; compare Esther i, 6). The doors (Deut. vi, 9), seldom high in private houses (Prov. xvii, 19), sometimes of stone (Burckhardt, i, 122), swung (comp. Shaw, Trav. p. 185) on morticed pivots (צִיר, Prov. xxvi, 14; in sockets, פְּתוּחֹת, 1 Kings vii, 50; comp. cardo fenuria, Vitruv. ix, 6), and were commonly fastened with wooden bolts (בְּרִיחַ, מַנְעוּל), which were opened (Judg. iii, 25; Isa. xxii, 22; comp. Harmer, i, 188) by means of a key (מַפְתֵּחַ), but only from the inside (Cant. v, 5; Luke xii, 7; comp. Faber, p. 427). In the better class of houses there was a door-keeper (Joseph. Ant. xvii, 5, 2) or female porter (John xviii, 16 sq.; Acts xii, 13; comp. Plaut. Curcul. i, 1, 76; Sept. 2 Sam. iv, 6), who, in case any one knocked outside (Luke xii, 36; xiii, 25; Acts xii, 13; compare Matt. vii, 7; Rev. iii, 20; Thilo, Apocryph. p. 218; see Becker, Charicles, i, 230), and gave their name (Acts xii, 14; Rev. iii, 20; comp. Plutarch, Gen. Soc. p. 31; Lucian, bis. Accus. p. 29; Apul. Asin. i, p. 19 Bip.), opened the door to them (Acts, xii, 13; comp. Athen. xiv, 614). (See Stuck, Antiq. conviv. p. 249; Sagittar, De januis vett. Jen. 1694, ch. 16; also Elsner, Observ. i, 411 sq., in Graevii Thesaur. vi.) Princes, however, had guards at the palace gates (1 Kings xiv, 27). The windows (חַלּוֹן), on account of the street dust, generally face the court-yard (Schubert, iii, 291), although anciently this rule does not appear to have so extensively prevailed (Judg. v, 28; Prov. vii, 6); they were closed by a lattice (Judg. v, 28). The most interior, or back rooms of all, were devoted to the special occupancy of the female members of the household, as is still universally the case in the East, under the name "harem," and no male dares intrude within their precincts (Chardin, vi, 6 sq.; Hartmann, Hebr. ii, 289 sq.; Hoffmann in the Hall. Encyclop. ii, 1, p. 396 sq.). The more distinguished Hebrews early had separate summer and winter residences (בֵּית חֹרֶף and בֵּית הַחֹרֶף, Amos iii, 15; Jer. xxxvi, 22; comp. Judg. iii, 20; see Harmer, i, 200; Prosp. Alp. Med. Ægypt. i, 6; Niebuhr, Trav. ii, 394). The latter were warmed (of which they had the more need, as glass windows are unknown in the East) by means of a fire-pot (אָח, Jer. xxxvi, 32), which is merely a vessel of burnt clay (Niebuhr, Beschr. p. 56) placed in a round hole in the middle of the room, over which, when the fire is burnt down, the inmates place a four-cornered frame, and next a carpet over this, and then gather around to enjoy the warmth (Tavernier, i, 276; Niebuhr, Trav. i, 154; ii, 394). The furniture of the rooms (2 Kings iv, 10) consisted of a sofa or couch (מִטָּה, compare Ezek. xxiii, 41; עֶרֶשׂ, Amos vi, 4; compare Josephus, Ant. xv, 9, 3), which luxury was often adorned gorgeously (Amos vi, 4; Cant. vii, 16), and furnished with pillows (Ezek. xiii, 10); and besides this, only chairs (כִּסֵּא), a table (שֻׁלְחָן), and lanterns or lamp-stands (2 Kings iv, 10). See all the above parts and articles in their alphabetical order. Compare House.

eyes were too weak to be used, and his works were principally written by an amanuensis. His principal works published under his name, besides those which have been already mentioned, were Theology explained and defended (Middletown, Conn., 1818, 5 vols.; and in a multitude of editions afterwards in 4 vols., both in the United States and in England):—Travels in New England and New York (New Haven, 1821, 4 vols., which contained the record of journeys on horseback undertaken for his health during vacations), and Sermons of an occasional character (New Haven, 1828). See Life prefixed to his Theology, and Dr. Sprague's life of him in Sparks's American Biography, vol. xiv, or new series, vol. iv.

Dwight, William T., D.D., a Congregationalist minister, was a son of President Dwight, and was born at Greenfield Hill, Conn., in 1795. He graduated at Yale College in 1813, and was distinguished for his scholarship in a class of many able scholars. From 1817 to 1819 he was a tutor in the college, and then removed to Philadelphia, where he practiced law until 1831. In that year he was awakened under a lecture of Dr. Skinner, and, abandoning the law, he was licensed by the Third Presbytery of New York, and accepted a call to the Third Church in Portland, Maine. His ministry of above thirty years was eminently successful. He was an overseer of Bowdoin College and president of the Maine Missionary Society. In 1852 he was president of the Albany Convention of Congregational churches. "As a preacher he is entitled to a foremost rank among American divines for sound and varied learning, clear and polished diction, graceful and effective delivery, and eminent success." He died at Andover Oct. 22, 1865. He published a Life of Sereno E. Dwight, with a Selection from his Discourses (1851).

Dye (אֹדֶם, adam', in the phrase "rams' skins dyed red," Exod. xxv, xxvi, xxxv, etc., to be "ruddy," Lam. iv, 7, or "red," Nah. ii, 3; Isa. i, 8; Prov. xxiii, 31; חָמֻץ, chamets', brilliant in color as wine-stained garments, Isa. lxiii, 1). The art of dyeing is undoubtedly of great antiquity, and is, perhaps, nearly coeval with that of weaving. The Egyptians particularly excelled in the brilliancy of their dyed stuffs; and from them the Hebrews, while dwelling among them, learned the art of dyeing. This is evident from the curtains of the tabernacle and the sacerdotal robes which were manufactured in the desert (Exod. xxvi, 1; xxviii, 5–8). The skill of the Egyptian linen-manufacturers in employing the metallic oxides and acids, or mordants, is placed beyond dispute by ocular proof. The various processes of dyeing and printing, or imparting the pattern, by blocks (the origin of calico printing), are exhibited in Rossellini's plates in all their minute details; and even the printing-blocks engraved with phonetic letters, and with the dye upon them, may be seen in the British Museum. Pliny's testimony is interesting as illustrating, though not wanted to corroborate the fact. "They dye cloth," he says, "in an extraordinary manner. It appears quite white before it is dipped; they then imbue it with drugs (mordants), which do not alter its appearance, but which absorb and retain a new and permanent color, varied according to the application of the drug." This is the modern process. Experimental investigation and chemical analysis have shown demonstratively that in the dyes which the linen and cotton manufacturers employed to produce certain results of which the relics are extant, they must have employed acetates of alum and of iron, and vegetable and mineral dyes, both substantive and adjective, as they are termed by the modern dyers. It is as easy as invidious to ascribe these applications to accident rather than to chemistry. Evidences drawn from all the other arts and trades prove that the Egyptians were good chemists. The long stripes of linen which the Hebrews worked in the desert for the tabernacle were separately blue, scarlet, and white (Exod. xxvi, 1). The last was probably the effect of bleaching; but the whole of the colors and cloth so dyed have been found, as well as the yellow, to evince chemical knowledge. It appears that the linen-printers and dyers used the carthamus tinctorius, which grows in Egypt, for red, woad for blue, and the reseda luteola, also a native of Egypt, for yellow. Now none of these operations could have been effected without a practical chemical knowledge. The system of bleaching now practised in this country, but recently introduced, has been used from time immemorial in the East, and doubtless, therefore, in ancient Egypt, viz. by immersion in oxygenated muriate of lime, after subjection to the action of steam or boiling water. The three other colors, blue, red, and yellow, are adjective colors, i. e. fugitive without the use of mordants. They could not be fixed, as we find them fixed, without their proper mordants, namely, oxides of tin, arsenic, and iron. Occasionally the muslin, beautifully dyed and patterned, was interwoven with silver and gold thread, some specimens of which can be traced up to the early period of Thothmes I, and even of Osirtasen. Indeed, the richly-painted walls and palaces, as well as the unmatched gilding, as fresh as when first laid on, show a perfect familiarity among the ancient Egyptians, not with mineral and vegetable colors only, but the perfect use of the metallic oxides in their composition.

The colors of the Egyptians were principally blue, red, green, black, yellow, and white. The red was an earthy bole; the yellow an iron ochre; the green was a mixture of a little ochre with a pulverulent glass, made by vitrefying the oxides of copper and iron with sand and soda; the blue was a glass of like composition with the ochreous addition; the black was bone or ivory black, and the white was a very pure chalk. They were mixed with water, and apparently a little gum, to render them tenacious and adhesive. With the Egyptians, the favorite combination of color was red, blue, and green; when black was introduced, yellow was added to harmonize with it; and in like manner they sought for every hue its congenial companion. They also guarded against the false effect of two colors in juxtaposition, as of red and blue, by placing between them a narrow line of white or yellow. They had few mixed colors, though purple, pink, orange, and brown are met with, and frequently on papyri. The blue, which is very brilliant, consists of fine particles of blue glass, and may be considered equivalent to our smalt; it seems to be the same that Vitruvius describes, which he supposes to have been first made at Alexandria; and it also agrees with the artificial kyanus of Theophrastus, invented in Egypt, which he says was laid on thicker than the native (or lapis lazuli). The thickness of the blue on the ceilings in Belzoni's tomb confirms his remark. The green is also a glass in powder, mixed with particles of colorless glass, to which it owes its brightness (Wilkinson, Anc. Eg., abridgm., ii, 292).

The following statements are from Winer, i, 362. There are many kinds of hues, both natural and artificial, mentioned in the Bible as fashionable or known among the Hebrews; besides white (לָבָן) and black (חָרַם or שָׁחֹר), there were: 1, principally red (אֹדֶם, brownish-red), crimson (תּוֹלַעַת שָׁנִי, תּוֹלַעַת כַּרְמִיל), purple or violet-red (אַרְגָּמָן), orange or vermilion (שָׁשִׁי); 2, next green (יָרָק); 3, pale yellow (יְרַקְרַק); 4, azure or hyacinthine (purplish) blue (תְּכֵלֶת); 5, brown or [illegible] ored (שָׁרֹק). Many of these are no doubt properly, or at least originally, the designation of the coloring materials. See CRIMSON; VERMILION; PURPLE. It is evident that each of these principal colors had a special significance among the Israelites, according to which it would be selected whenever there was an op-
